PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 76th CONGRESS, THIRD SESSION

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 3, 1940

The 3d of January being the day prescribed by the Constitution of the United States for the annual meeting of Congress, the third session of the Seventy-sixth Congress commenced this day.

The Senate assembled in its Chamber at the Capitol.

JOHN N. GARNER, of Texas, Vice President of the United States, called the Senate to order at 12 o'clock meridian.

The Chaplain, Rev. Z. Barney T. Phillips, D. D., of the city of Washington, offered the following

PRAYER

O Thou, who art from everlasting to everlasting, whose years fail not, and without whom, as our Eternal Refuge, we do but bring our years to an end, as it were, "a tale that is told": Help us, we beseech Thee, to face the veiled mystery of life and duty, pledging a nobler dedication and a more devoted service to our country, knowing that though today we may be stranded in the shallows or adrift upon the uncharted waste of waters, nevertheless tomorrow Thy love will be the same great deep and the same steady light revealed unto Thy children through all the yesterdays of time.

Bless Thou our Nation, O Ruler of Nations; give wisdom and strength to our President, Vice President, and the Members of the Congress; sanctify our noble purposes and the moral fiber of our lives; may every citizen of our beloved land turn unto God and find, even without knowledge of it, that goodness and strength grow together through all life's changing days.

We pray that Thou wilt overcome in us the sin that doth so easily beset us, that out of our thought and our desire may be woven such a plea for peace on the earth as will bring men out of the shadow into the very presence of God and under the rule of the Prince of Peace, in whose name we offer up our imperfect prayer. Amen.

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] and the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY] are absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON], the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. STEWART] are unavoidably detained.

The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] is absent on official business for the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] is necessarily detained, and that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is absent on official business of the Senate.

Mr. TOBEY. I regret to announce the necessary absence of the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] due to the serious illness of a member of his family.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. BARKLEY submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 197), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That a committee consisting of two Senators be appointed to join such committee as may be appointed by the House of Representatives to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that a quorum of each House is assembled and that the Congress is ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make.

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. McNARY the committee on the part of the Senate.

NOTIFICATION TO THE HOUSE

Mr. McNARY submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 198), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary inform the House of Representatives that a quorum of the Senate is assembled and that the Senate is ready to proceed to business.

HOURLY OF DAILY MEETING

Mr. MINTON submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 199), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the hour of daily meeting of the Senate be 12 o'clock meridian unless otherwise ordered.

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, it is contemplated that later a resolution will come over from the House of Representatives inviting the Senate to participate in a joint session of the two Houses at 2 o'clock p. m. to listen to the President's message. It takes some time for the House to ascertain the presence of a quorum, and there is nothing for us to do until the hour of 2 o'clock approaches.

I therefore move that the Senate take a recess until 1:40 o'clock p. m. today.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kentucky.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until 1 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m., when it reassembled, and the Vice President resumed the chair.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Callo-way, one of its reading clerks, informed the Senate that a quorum of the House of Representatives had assembled, and that the House was ready to proceed with business.

The message also informed the Senate that a committee of three members had been appointed by the Speaker on the part of the House of Representatives to join with the committee on the part of the Senate to notify the President of the United States that a quorum of each House had assembled and that Congress was ready to receive any communication that he might be pleased to make, and that the Speaker had appointed Mr. RAYBURN, Mr. DOUGHTON, and Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts the members of the committee on the part of the House of Representatives.

The message announced that the House had agreed to a concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 38) providing that the two Houses of Congress assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Wednesday, the 3d day of January 1940, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, for the purpose of receiving such communications as the President shall be pleased to make to them, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE TO NOTIFY THE PRESIDENT

Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. McNARY advanced in the center aisle, and Mr. BARKLEY said: Mr. President, the committee appointed on the part of the Senate to act in conjunction with a similar committee on the part of the House to notify the President that the Congress is now in session and ready for business has discharged its duty, and the President has indicated that he will address a joint session of the two Houses of the Congress at 2 o'clock p. m. today.

JOINT MEETING OF THE TWO HOUSES

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 38) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the two Houses of Congress assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Wednesday, the 3d day of January 1940, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, for the purpose of receiving such communications as the President of the United States shall be pleased to make to them.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I think probably we have plenty of time, and it might be well to have a quorum call. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk (Emery L. Frazier) called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Connally	Holman	Reynolds
Ashurst	Danaher	Hughes	Russell
Austin	Davis	Johnson, Calif.	Schwartz
Bankhead	Downey	Johnson, Colo.	Schwellenbach
Barbour	Ellender	King	Sheppard
Barkley	Frazier	Lee	Slattery
Bilbo	George	Lucas	Taft
Borah	Gibson	Lundeen	Thomas, Utah
Brown	Gillette	McCarran	Tobey
Bulow	Glass	McNary	Townsend
Burke	Green	Maloney	Truman
Byrd	Guffey	Mead	Tydings
Byrnes	Gurney	Miller	Vandenberg
Capper	Harrison	Minton	Wagner
Chandler	Hatch	Murray	Walsh
Chavez	Hayden	Neely	Wheeler
Clark, Idaho	Herring	Pittman	White
Clark, Mo.	Hill	Radcliffe	Wiley

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, in accordance with the terms of the concurrent resolution heretofore agreed to, I move that the Senate proceed to the Hall of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock and 48 minutes p. m.) the Senate, preceded by the Sergeant at Arms [Chesley W. Jurney], the Vice President, and the Secretary [Edwin A. Halsey], proceeded to the Hall of the House of Representatives.

ANNUAL ADDRESS BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

The address of the President of the United States, this day delivered at a joint meeting of the two Houses of Congress, is printed on page 7 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

PROGRAM FOR THE WEEK

The Senate having returned to its Chamber (at 2 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.), it reassembled, and the Vice President took the chair.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, for the information of the Senate I desire to state that I am advised that the President's message on the Budget will be sent to the Congress tomorrow to be read to the two Houses. Therefore it is my purpose to move that the Senate adjourn until tomorrow. So far as I can see now, tomorrow we shall adjourn until Monday; and on Monday I hope we may have the calendar called for the consideration of unobjected-to bills.

Therefore, if there is nothing further to be considered today, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 47 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until tomorrow, January 4, 1940, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 3, 1940

This being the day fixed by the twentieth amendment of the Constitution for the annual meeting of the Congress of the United States, the Members of the House of Representatives of the Seventy-sixth Congress met in their Hall, and at 12 o'clock noon were called to order by the Speaker, Hon. WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD, a Representative from the State of Alabama.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following

PRAYER

Eternal God, our Father, infinite in goodness and wisdom, we approach Thy altar of prayer. We thank Thee for that love which sings through the ages and whose tremendous comfort we may feel as the years pass by. We pray for that guidance which enables us to weave in the great loom of life characters which shall stand the judgment of time. In these perilous days hush our souls to meet the shocks of this mad world, wearying along in sands and thorns and in the bitterness of unbridled passion. O for that peace which Thou hast promised! We look upon the mountain and it is not there; upon the valley and it is dark; upon the horizon and we see the faintest star. O lift and strengthen Thy right hand in the darkness that the high arms of the tyranny of war may be broken. Inspire us with the hardy, adventurous souls that first christened the hillsides and plains of our young Republic. Grant that hope, faith, and courage may burn with living fire along the faltering paths of our country until it finds its full fruition in the spirit of the Master. By worth and service, by fortitude and patriotism, may the Congress earn the right to stand erect among the underscored servants of our free land. In the folds of divine care, in the embrace of a Father's love, bless and guide our President, our Speaker, the Members, and officers and employees.

Our Father of mercy and glory, how frail and transitory our span of life; our ranks are appallingly broken. They toiled and felt the rugged ways of time and passed on with the pledge of Thy power that death is just a phase of life that flows on and on. They are now where they behold the unforgotten faces and where the lost ones speak again. In our dear Redeemer's name. Amen.

REPRESENTATIVES-ELECT

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the Clerk of the House:

JANUARY 3, 1940.

The SPEAKER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

My DEAR MR. SPEAKER: Certificates of election in due form of law of the following Representatives-elect to the Seventy-sixth Congress to fill vacancies have been filed in this office, viz:

District and State	Representative-elect	Predecessor
First South Carolina.....	Clara G. McMillan....	Thomas S. McMillan.
Thirty-fourth New York.....	Edwin Arthur Hall....	Bert Lord.
Fourth Pennsylvania.....	John Sheridan.....	J. Burrwood Daly.

The Clerk also has received a certificate signed by the Governor of Puerto Rico, showing the appointment of Bolívar Pagán as Resident Commissioner of Puerto Rico, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Santiago Iglesias.

Very respectfully,

SOUTH TRIMBLE,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

SWEARING IN OF NEW MEMBERS

The SPEAKER. If the Members-elect, along with the Commissioner-elect of Puerto Rico, will come into the Well of the House, the Chair will administer the oath of office.

Mrs. McMILLAN, Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL, Mr. JOHN SHERIDAN, and Mr. BOLÍVAR PAGÁN appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of office prescribed by law.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that during the day it may be in order to move that the House stand in recess.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE TO NOTIFY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

House Resolution 327

Resolved, That a committee of three Members be appointed by the Speaker on the part of the House of Representatives to join with a committee on the part of the Senate to notify the President of the United States that a quorum of each House has assembled and Congress is ready to receive any communication that he may be pleased to make.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

The Chair appointed Mr. RAYBURN, Mr. DOUGHTON, and Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts as a committee to notify the President.

NOTIFICATION TO THE SENATE

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 328

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House inform the Senate that a quorum of the House has appeared and that the House is ready to proceed with business.

The resolution was agreed to.

DAILY HOUR OF MEETING

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 329

Resolved, That until otherwise ordered the daily hour of meeting of the House of Representatives shall be at 12 o'clock meridian.

The resolution was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions:

Senate Resolution 197

Resolved, That a committee consisting of two Senators be appointed to join such committee as may be appointed by the House of Representatives to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that a quorum of each House is assembled and that the Congress is ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make.

The message also announced that pursuant to the foregoing resolution the Vice President had appointed Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. McNARY as members of the committee on the part of the Senate.

Senate Resolution 198

Resolved, That the Secretary inform the House of Representatives that a quorum of the Senate is assembled and that the Senate is ready to proceed to business.

RESIGNATION

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following communication:

The Clerk read as follows:

JANUARY 2, 1940.

HON. WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD,

Speaker, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

For the purpose of accepting the office of mayor of Memphis, Tenn., I have this day notified the Governor of Tennessee of my resignation as Representative in Congress from the Ninth Tennessee District and hereby confirm such resignation. Permit me to express deep and lasting appreciation of your fine cooperation and manifold courtesies during my service in the House of Representatives.

Very sincerely yours,

WALTER CHANDLER.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resignation will be accepted.

There was no objection.

ELECTION CONTEST—BYRON N. SCOTT AGAINST THOMAS M. EATON

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the Clerk of the House of Representatives, which was read by the Clerk and referred to the Committee on Elections No. 2, and ordered printed:

JANUARY 3, 1940.

THE SPEAKER,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have the honor to lay before the House of Representatives the contest for a seat in the House of Representatives for the Seventy-sixth Congress of the United States for the Eighteenth Congressional District of the State of California, Byron N. Scott against Thomas M. Eaton, notice of which has been filed in the office of the Clerk of the House; and also transmit herewith original testimony, papers, and documents relating thereto.

In compliance with the act approved March 2, 1887, entitled "An act relating to contested-election cases," the Clerk has opened and printed the testimony in the above case, and such portions of the testimony as the parties in interest agreed upon or as seemed proper to the Clerk, after giving the requisite notices, have been printed and indexed together with the notices of contest and the answers thereto, and original papers and exhibits have been sealed up and are ready to be laid before the Committee on Elections.

Two copies of the printed testimony in the aforesaid case have been mailed to the contestant and the same number to the contestee which, together with the briefs of the parties, will be laid before the Committee on Elections to which the case shall be referred.

Yours respectfully,

SOUTH TRIMBLE,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

ELECTION CONTEST—ALBERT F. SWANSON AGAINST VINCENT F. HARRINGTON

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the Clerk of the House of Representatives, which was read by the Clerk and referred to the Committee on Elections No. 3 and ordered printed:

JANUARY 3, 1940.

THE SPEAKER,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have the honor to lay before the House of Representatives the contest for a seat in the House of Representatives for the Seventy-sixth Congress of the United States for the Ninth Congressional District of the State of Iowa, Albert F. Swanson against Vincent F. Harrington, notice of which has been filed in the office of the Clerk of the House; and also transmit herewith original testimony, papers, and documents relating thereto.

In compliance with the act approved March 2, 1887, entitled "An act relating to contested-election cases," the Clerk has opened and printed the testimony in the above case, and such portions of the testimony as the parties in interest agreed upon or as seemed proper to the Clerk, after giving the requisite notices, have been printed and indexed, together with the notices of contest, and the answers thereto and original papers and exhibits have been sealed up and are ready to be laid before the Committee on Elections.

Two copies of the printed testimony in the aforesaid case have been mailed to the contestant and the same number to the contestee, which, together with the briefs of the parties, will be laid before the Committee on Elections, to which the case shall be referred.

Yours respectfully,

SOUTH TRIMBLE,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

THE LATE HON. SANTIAGO IGLESIAS

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from Hon. Pedro Martinez Fraga, Ambassador from Cuba:

EMBAJADA DE CUBA,
Washington, December 6, 1939.

HON. WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD,

Speaker of the House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I wish to convey to you, and through you to the House of Representatives, in the name of the Cuban Government and in my own, the expression of deepest and most sincere sympathy in the passing of the distinguished Resident Commissioner of Puerto Rico, Hon. Santiago Iglesias.

Believe me, my dear Mr. Speaker,
Very sincerely yours,

PEDRO MARTINEZ FRAGA,
Ambassador.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE TO NOTIFY THE PRESIDENT

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, your committee appointed on the part of the House to join a like committee on the part of the Senate to notify the President of the United States that a quorum of each House has been assembled and is ready to receive any communication he may make, has performed that duty. The President of the United States requested the committee to state that he would communicate with the Congress in person today at 2 o'clock p. m.

JOINT SESSION OF THE HOUSE AND SENATE

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Concurrent Resolution 38

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring). That the two Houses of Congress assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Wednesday, the 3d day of January 1940, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, for the purpose of receiving such communications as the President of the United States shall be pleased to make to them.

The resolution was agreed to.

REPORT OF SELECT COMMITTEE OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES TO INVESTIGATE UN-AMERICAN ACTIVITIES

The SPEAKER laid before the House a report from the Select Committee of the House to Investigate Un-American Activities, which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

ANNOUNCEMENT

The SPEAKER. Before the joint meeting of the two Houses is held, the Chair wishes to state that the three front rows of the Chamber have been reserved for Members of the Senate. Those places have not been marked "reserved" as usual, and the Chair requests all Members of the House not to occupy the three front rows in the Chamber.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a eulogy on our late colleague, Dr. William I. Sirovich.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the request is granted. There was no objection.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a short editorial.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to state that the House will be in session after the President of the United States delivers his address. I think it will probably be more appropriate to have these requests at that time.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina withdraws the request.

RECESS

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House stand in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered. There was no objection.

Thereupon, at 12 o'clock and 42 minutes p. m., the House stood in recess, subject to the call of the Chair.

AFTER RECESS

The recess having expired, the House (at 1 o'clock and 52 minutes p. m.) was called to order by the Speaker.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed without amendment to a concurrent resolution of the House of the following title:

H. Con. Res. 38. Concurrent resolution providing for a joint session of Congress for the purpose of receiving the President's message.

JOINT MEETING OF THE SENATE AND HOUSE

At 1 o'clock and 54 minutes p. m., the Doorkeeper, Mr. J. J. Sinnott, announced the Vice President of the United States and the Members of the United States Senate.

The Members of the House rose.

The Senate, preceded by the Vice President and by their Secretary and Sergeant at Arms, entered the Chamber.

The Vice President took the Chair at the right of the Speaker, and the Members of the Senate took the seats reserved for them.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints, on behalf of the House, the following Members to escort the President into the Chamber to deliver his address: The gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN], the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON], and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN].

The VICE PRESIDENT. On behalf of the Senate, the Chair appoints the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] as a like committee on the part of the Senate.

At 1 o'clock and 56 minutes p. m. the Doorkeeper announced the Cabinet of the President of the United States.

The members of the Cabinet of the President entered the Chamber and took the seats reserved for them in front of the Speaker's rostrum.

At 2:02 o'clock p. m. the President of the United States, escorted by the committee of Senators and Representatives, entered the Hall of the House and stood at the Clerk's desk amidst prolonged applause.

The SPEAKER. Senators and Representatives, I have the distinguished honor of presenting the President of the United States.

ADDRESS OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 528)

The PRESIDENT. Mr. Vice President, Mr. Speaker, Members of the Senate and of the House of Representatives: As the Congress reassembles, the impact of wars abroad makes it natural to approach "the state of the union" through a discussion of foreign affairs.

But it is important that those who hear and read this message should in no way confuse that approach with any thought that our Government is abandoning, or even overlooking, the great significance of its domestic policies.

The social and economic forces which have been mismanaged abroad until they have resulted in revolution, dictatorship, and war are the same as those which we here are struggling to adjust peacefully at home.

You are well aware that dictatorships—and the philosophy of force which justifies and accompanies dictatorships—have originated in almost every case in the necessity for drastic action to improve internal conditions where democratic action for one reason or another has failed to respond to modern needs and modern demands.

It was with farsighted wisdom that the framers of the Constitution brought together in one magnificent phrase three great concepts—"common defense," "general welfare," and "domestic tranquility."

More than a century and a half later we still believe with them that our best defense is the promotion of our general welfare and domestic tranquility.

In previous messages to the Congress I have repeatedly warned that, whether we like it or not, the daily lives of American citizens will, of necessity, feel the shock of events on other continents. This is no longer mere theory for it has been definitely proved by the facts of yesterday and today.

To say that the domestic well-being of 130,000,000 Americans is deeply affected by the well-being or the ill-being of the populations of other nations is only to recognize in world affairs the truth we all accept in home affairs.

If in any local unit—a city, county, State, or region—low standards of living are permitted to continue, the level of the civilization of the entire Nation will be pulled downward.

The identical principle extends to the rest of a civilized world. But there are those who wishfully insist, in innocence or ignorance, or both, that the United States of America as a self-contained unit can live happily and prosperously, its future secure, inside a high wall of isolation, while outside the rest of civilization and the commerce and culture of mankind are shattered.

I can understand the feelings of those who warn the Nation that they will never again consent to the sending of American youth to fight on the soil of Europe. But, as I remember, nobody has asked them to consent, for nobody expects such an undertaking.

The overwhelming majority of our fellow citizens do not abandon in the slightest their hope and expectation that the United States will not become involved in military participation in the war.

I can also understand the wishfulness of those who oversimplify the whole situation by repeating that all we have to do is to mind our own business and keep the Nation out of war. But there is a vast difference between keeping out of war and pretending that this war is none of our business.

We do not have to go to war with other nations, but at least we can strive with other nations to encourage the kind of peace that will lighten the troubles of the world, and by so doing help our own Nation as well.

I ask that all of us everywhere think things through with the single aim of how best to serve the future of our own Nation. I do not mean merely its future relationship with the outside world. I mean its domestic future as well—the work, the security, the prosperity, the happiness, the life of all the boys and girls of the United States, as they are inevitably affected by such world relationships. For it becomes clearer and clearer that the future world will be a shabby and dangerous place to live in—even for Americans to live in—if it is ruled by force in the hands of a few.

Already the crash of swiftly moving events over the earth has made us all think with a longer view. Fortunately, that thinking cannot be controlled by partisanship. The time is long past when any political party or any particular group can curry and capture public favor by labeling itself the "peace party" or the "peace bloc." That label belongs to the whole United States and to every right-thinking man, woman, and child within it.

For out of all the military and diplomatic turmoil, out of all the propaganda and counterpropaganda of the present conflicts, there are two facts which stand out and which the whole world acknowledges.

The first is that never before has the Government of the United States done so much as in our recent past to establish and maintain the policy of the good neighbor with its sister nations.

The second is that in almost every nation in the world today there is a true public belief that the United States has been, and will continue to be, a potent and active factor in seeking the reestablishment of peace.

In these recent years we have had a clean record of peace and good will. It is an open book that cannot be twisted or defamed. It is a record that must be continued and enlarged.

So I hope that Americans everywhere will work out for themselves the several alternatives which lie before world civilization, which necessarily includes our own.

We must look ahead and see the possibilities for our children if the rest of the world comes to be dominated by concentrated force alone—even though today we are a very great and a very powerful nation.

We must look ahead and see the effect on our own future if all the small nations throughout the world have their independence snatched from them or become mere appendages to relatively vast and powerful military systems.

We must look ahead and see the kind of lives our children would have to lead if a large part of the rest of the world were compelled to worship the god imposed by a military ruler, or were forbidden to worship God at all; if the rest of the world were forbidden to read and hear the facts—the daily news of their own and other nations—if they were deprived of the truth which makes men free.

We must look ahead and see the effect on our future generations if world trade is controlled by any nation or group of nations which sets up that control through military force.

It is, of course, true that the record of past centuries includes destruction of small nations, enslavement of peoples, and building of empires on the foundation of force. But wholly apart from the greater international morality which we seek today, we recognize the practical fact that with modern weapons and modern conditions, modern man can no longer live a civilized life if we are to go back to the practice of wars and conquests of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries.

Summing up this need of looking ahead, and in words of common sense and good American citizenship, I hope that we will have fewer American ostriches in our midst. It is not good for the ultimate health of ostriches to bury their heads in the sand.

Only an ostrich would look upon these wars through the eyes of cynicism or ridicule.

Of course, the peoples of other nations have the right to choose their own form of government. But we in this Nation still believe that such choice should be predicated on certain freedoms which we think are essential everywhere. We know that we ourselves will never be wholly safe at home unless other governments recognize such freedoms.

Twenty-one American republics, expressing the will of 250,000,000 people to preserve peace and freedom in this hemisphere are displaying a unanimity of ideals and practical relationships which gives hope that what is being done here can be done on other continents. We in all the Americas are coming to the realization that we can retain our respective nationalities without at the same time threatening the national existence of our neighbors.

Such truly friendly relationships, for example, permit us to follow our own domestic policies with reference to our agricultural products, while at the same time we have the privilege of trying to work out mutual-assistance arrangements for a world distribution of world agricultural surpluses.

And we have been able to apply the same simple principle to many manufactured products—surpluses of which must be sold in the world export markets if we would continue a high level of production and employment.

For many years after the World War blind economic selfishness in most countries, including our own, resulted in a destructive mine field of trade restrictions which blocked the channels of commerce among nations. This policy was one of the contributing causes of existing wars. It dammed up vast unsalable surpluses, helping to bring about unemployment and suffering in the United States and everywhere else.

To point the way to break up the log jam, our Trade Agreements Act was passed, based upon a policy of equality of treatment among nations and of mutually profitable arrangements of trade.

It is not correct to infer that legislative powers have been transferred from the Congress to the executive branch of the Government. Everybody recognizes that general tariff legislation is a congressional function, but we know that, because of the stupendous task involved in the fashioning and passing of a general law, it is advisable to provide at times of emergency some flexibility to make the general law adjustable to quickly changing conditions.

We are in such a time today. Our present trade-agreement method provides a temporary flexibility and is, therefore, practical in the best sense. It should be kept alive to serve our trade interests, agricultural and industrial, in many valuable ways during the existing wars.

But, what is more important, the Trade Agreements Act should be extended as an indispensable part of the foundation of any stable and durable peace.

The old conditions of world trade made for no enduring peace; and when the time comes, the United States must use its influence to open up the trade channels of the world in order that no nation need feel compelled in later days to seek by force of arms what it can well gain by peaceful conference. For this purpose we need the Trade Agreements Act even more than when it was passed.

I emphasize the leadership which this Nation can take when the time comes for a renewal of world peace. Such an influence will be greatly weakened if this Government becomes a dog in the manger of trade selfishness.

The first President of the United States warned us against entangling foreign alliances. The present President of the United States subscribes to and follows that precept.

But trade cooperation with the rest of the world does not violate that precept in any way.

Even as through these trade agreements we prepare to cooperate in a world that wants peace, we must likewise be prepared to take care of ourselves if the world cannot attain peace.

For several years past we have been compelled to strengthen our own national defense. That has created a very large portion of our Treasury deficits. This year, in the light of continuing world uncertainty, I am asking the Congress for Army and Navy increases which are based not on panic but on common sense. They are not as great as enthusiastic alarmists seek. They are not as small as unrealistic persons claiming superior private information would demand.

As will appear in the annual Budget tomorrow, the only important increase in any part of the Budget is the estimate for national defense. Practically all other important items show a reduction. Therefore, in the hope that we can continue in these days of increasing economic prosperity to reduce the Federal deficit, I am asking the Congress to levy sufficient additional taxes to meet the emergency spending for national defense.

Behind the Army and Navy, of course, lies our ultimate line of defense—"the general welfare" of our people. We cannot report, despite all the progress we have made in our domestic problems—despite the fact that production is back to 1929 levels—that all our problems are solved. The fact of unemployment of millions of men and women remains a symptom of a number of difficulties in our economic system not yet adjusted.

While the number of the unemployed has decreased, while their immediate needs for food and clothing—as far as the Federal Government is concerned—have been largely met, while their morale has been kept alive by giving them useful public work, we have not yet found a way to employ the surplus of our labor which the efficiency of our industrial processes has created.

We refuse the European solution of using the unemployed to build up excessive armaments which eventually result in dictatorships. We encourage an American way—through an increase of national income which is the only way we can be sure will take up the slack. Much progress has been made; much remains to be done.

We recognize that we must find an answer in terms of work and opportunity.

The unemployment problem today has become very definitely a problem of youth as well as of age. As each year has gone by hundreds of thousands of boys and girls have come of working age. They now form an army of unused youth. They must be an especial concern of democratic government.

We must continue, above all things, to look for a solution of their special problem. For they, looking ahead to life, are entitled to action on our part and not merely to admonitions of optimism or lectures on economic laws.

Some in our midst have sought to instill a feeling of fear and defeatism in the minds of the American people about this problem.

To face the task of finding jobs faster than invention can take them away is not defeatism. To warble easy platitudes that if we will only go back to ways that have failed everything will be all right is not courage.

We met a problem of real fear and real defeatism in 1933. We faced the facts with action, not with words.

The American people will reject the doctrine of fear, confident that in the thirties we have been building soundly a new order of things different from the order of the twenties. In this dawn of the decade of the forties, with our program of social improvement started, we must continue to carry on the processes of recovery so as to preserve our gains and provide jobs at living wages.

There are, of course, many other items of great public interest which could be enumerated in this message—the continued conservation of our natural resources, the improvement of health and of education, the extension of social security to larger groups, the freeing of large areas from restricted transportation discriminations, the extension of the merit system, and many others.

Our continued progress in the social and economic field is important not only for the significance of each part of it but for the total effect which our program of domestic betterment has upon that most valuable asset of a nation in dangerous times—its national unity.

The permanent security of America in the present crisis does not lie in armed force alone. What we face is a set of world-wide forces of disintegration—vicious, ruthless, destructive of all the moral, religious, and political standards which mankind, after centuries of struggle, has come to cherish most.

In these moral values, in these forces which have made our nation great, we must actively and practically reassert our faith.

These words—"national unity"—must not be allowed to become merely a high-sounding phrase, a vague generality, a pious hope, to which everyone can give lip service. They must be made to have real meaning in terms of the daily thoughts and acts of every man, woman, and child in our land during the coming year and the years that lie ahead.

For national unity is, in a very real and deep sense, the fundamental safeguard of all democracy.

Doctrines which set group against group, faith against faith, race against race, class against class, fanning the fires of hatred in men too despondent, too desperate to think for themselves, were used as rabble-rousing slogans on which dictators could ride to power. And once in power they could saddle their tyrannies on whole nations, and on their weaker neighbors.

This is the danger to which we in America must begin to be more alert. For the apologists for foreign aggressors, and equally those selfish and partisan groups at home who wrap themselves in a false mantle of Americanism to promote their own economic, financial, or political advantage, are now trying European tricks upon us, seeking to muddy the stream of our national thinking, weakening us in the face of danger by trying to set our own people to fighting among themselves. Such tactics are what have helped to plunge Europe into war. We must combat them as we would the plague if American integrity and security are to be preserved. We cannot afford to face the future as a disunited people.

We must as a united people keep ablaze on this continent the flames of human liberty, of reason, of democracy, and of fair play as living things to be preserved for the better world that is to come.

Overstatement, bitterness, vituperation, and the beating of drums have contributed mightily to ill-feeling and wars between nations. If these unnecessary and unpleasant actions are harmful in the international field, they are also hurtful in the domestic scene. Peace among ourselves would seem to have some of the advantage of peace between us and other nations. And in the long run history amply demonstrates that angry controversy surely wins less than calm discussion.

In the spirit, therefore, of a greater unselfishness, recognizing that the world—including the United States of America—passes through perilous times, I am very hopeful that the closing session of the Seventy-sixth Congress will consider the needs of the Nation and of humanity with calmness, tolerance, and cooperative wisdom.

May the year 1940 be pointed to by our children as another period when democracy justified its existence as the best instrument of government yet devised by mankind.

Thereupon, at 2 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m., the President retired from the Hall of the House.

At 2 o'clock and 42 minutes p. m. the Speaker announced that the joint session was dissolved.

Thereupon the Vice President and the Members of the Senate returned to their Chamber.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. LEWIS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I should like the RECORD to show that I did not answer to the roll call because I came into the Chamber just at the conclusion of the roll call after attending to business at the office of the Army engineers with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SECREST].

THE LATE J. WILL TAYLOR

Mr. REECE of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, after 20 years of close association with him, it now becomes my sad duty to announce the death of my friend and colleague, the Honorable J. WILL TAYLOR, late a Representative from the State of Tennessee. As you know, he was a great fighter, and like a great fighter, when his work was done—and well done it was—and he received his summons from the Supreme Commander, he answered the summons with subservience, tranquillity, and complete resignation, in the assurance that a public servant who had led a righteous life and had devoted his energies and abilities to advancing the interests of his country and his fellow men would receive a full and satisfying reward.

At a later date I shall seek opportunity to speak more fully on the life and character of this great American, who by reason of his long and faithful service and fine qualities of heart and mind endeared himself to his colleagues on both sides of the aisle as he did to his constituents in his own district and the people of the whole State. At that time, others of his colleagues will also have an opportunity to speak their feelings in regard to him.

Mr. Speaker, I send to the Clerk's desk a resolution and ask its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 330

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. J. WILL TAYLOR, a Representative from the State of Tennessee.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The resolution was agreed to.

THE LATE SANTIAGO IGLESIAS

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 331

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. SANTIAGO IGLESIAS, Resident Commissioner of Puerto Rico.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The resolution was agreed to.

THE LATE CARL E. MAPES

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, it becomes my sad duty to announce to the House the death of the dean of the Michigan delegation, a man who has served this House and this country through that service for the past 27 years. I refer to the Honorable CARL E. MAPES, a man known, I would say, to every Member of the House as one of the finest type of men and legislators who has come to this House.

Mr. Speaker, my beloved colleague died in the harness, as he had wished to die. At the time of his death he was on duty in the city of New Orleans with the committee of which he was a member, a subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, for the study of the question of petroleum. It was while he was there, on the 12th day of December, that he passed on.

Mr. Speaker, I shall not today attempt to detail the high character or the type of service this gentleman gave to his country, but at a later day I, as well as other Members of the House, will have that opportunity.

Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution and ask its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 332

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. CARL E. MAPES, a Representative from the State of Michigan.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The resolution was agreed to.

THE LATE WILLIAM I. SIROVICH

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 333

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. WILLIAM I. SIROVICH, a Representative from the State of New York.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The resolution was agreed to.

THE LATE JOHN A. MARTIN

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Colorado delegation, I announce with deep regret the death in Washington, D. C., on December 23, 1939, of our colleague, Hon. JOHN A. MARTIN, Representative from the Third Congressional District of Colorado.

Mr. MARTIN and I came to the Congress together on March 4, 1909. He served here 4 years and then retired voluntarily. He came back to the House in 1933 and has served here ever since.

Mr. Speaker, our State has lost one of our finest citizens and Congress has lost one of its most efficient and hard-working Members. Every day of his life his whole heart beat for common humanity. The underprivileged people of our country have lost one of the most loyal, devoted, courageous, and conscientious friends they ever had. I knew him well for nearly a half century. He was indeed a noble character and our beloved Commonwealth will revere his memory for many years to come. At an appropriate later date I hope to deliver a more extended tribute to his life, character, and public services to our country and to Colorado.

Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 334

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. JOHN A. MARTIN, a Representative from the State of Colorado.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The resolution was agreed to.

THE LATE WILLIAM A. ASHBROOK

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Speaker, with great sorrow I find it necessary to announce to the House the passing of our late colleague, Hon. WILLIAM A. ASHBROOK.

Mr. ASHBROOK began his service in the House in 1906, and although his service was not continuous he served in the House many years. It was my pleasure to know him for a period of 27 years. All who knew him recognized in him a genuine man, a man who always discharged his duties conscientiously, and one who rendered real service to his fellow man.

I shall not at this time discuss further the sterling qualities of Mr. ASHBROOK as a public man and as a private citizen, but at a later date I shall seek the opportunity to discuss at length the merits of our deceased friend.

Mr. Speaker, I send to the desk a resolution and ask its favorable consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 335

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. WILLIAM A. ASHBROOK, a Representative from the State of Ohio.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The resolution was agreed to.

THE LATE GEORGE H. HEINKE

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, it becomes my sad mission this afternoon to announce to the membership of the House the death of the Honorable GEORGE H. HEINKE, a Member of the House from the State of Nebraska.

Mr. HEINKE died following an automobile accident which occurred while he was on his way to Washington to attend the last session of the Seventy-sixth Congress.

Mr. HEINKE is known all over the State of Nebraska. During his short service in the House he rendered valuable service to his country, his State, and his district, and during that service he endeared himself to a great majority of the Members of the House on both sides of the aisle.

At some later date, Mr. Speaker, I shall seek an opportunity to tell more of the valuable services of this able Member from my State and also say something about his wonderful character and his useful life. I know also that the entire Nebraska delegation will join me in paying a further tribute to the life, character, and public service of the late GEORGE H. HEINKE, of Nebraska.

Mr. Speaker, I send a resolution to the Clerk's desk and move its immediate adoption.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 336

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. GEORGE H. HEINKE, a Representative from the State of Nebraska.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The resolution was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, as a further mark of respect to the deceased Members, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 7 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Thursday, January 4, 1940, at 12 o'clock meridian.

SENATE

THURSDAY, JANUARY 4, 1940

The Chaplain, Rev. Zebarny T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God and Heavenly Father, we bow before Thee in deep humility and tender penitence, for that Thou, being very high exalted above all worlds, beholdest the proud afar off yet condescendest to make the contrite heart Thy dwelling. In this moment of silence we invoke Thy presence to put away our sin; enter into our souls deeper than we have ever known; let Thy glory dawn upon our sight clearer than ever before, and do Thou light the flame upon the altar of our lives, that our prayer may be set forth in Thy sight as the incense.

Grant in the rush and pressure of our modern life, when feverish activity is made the measure of all things, that we may be replenished with gifts of silence and rivers of peace, using them not to escape from our duty but that, seeing it more clearly, we may be the better enabled to do it as unto Thee. We ask it in the name of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

PROGRAM FOR AGRICULTURE

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD resolutions adopted by a group of western Kansas farmers at a meeting at Leoti, Kans., December 18, 1939. I may say that the program embodied in this resolution expresses the sentiments of a great many farmers of the western part of Kansas.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolutions adopted by a group of farmers assembled in Leoti, Kans., December 18, 1939:

Be it hereby resolved by this group assembled, First, that we hereby approve the present agricultural program and believe that it should be continued without material change.

Second. We recommend that parity payments on our major crops be continued and that some method such as the processing tax be developed to finance such payments.

Third. We recommend that commodity loans be continued on all special commodities and that no material change be made in this program.

Fourth. We favor the continuation of the Federal crop-insurance program, but recommend that more equitable yields and rates be worked out.

President, Wichita County Farm Bureau.
R. F. REAM,
County Grange Deputy.
A. E. ANDERSON,
Chairman, County Agricultural County Conservation Committee.

EXPRESSION OF SYMPATHY FOR FINLAND BY YANKEE DIVISION VETERANS' ASSOCIATION

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD as part of my remarks a resolution adopted by the Yankee Division Veterans' Association, Department of Connecticut, expressing sympathy for the plight of Finland. I am fully in accord with that expression of sympathy.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Yankee Division Veterans' Association, Department of Connecticut, 1939-40]

DECEMBER 29, 1939.

HON. FRANCIS T. MALONEY,

Room 354, Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

Whereas the Yankee Division fought and left its dead on the battlefields of France in defense of the principles of freedom and democracy; and

Whereas the Republic of Finland, a Government of free people, meeting its obligations to other nations, and one of the few remaining democracies in Europe, is now fighting for its life and the preservation of its democracy: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Yankee Division Veterans' Association, convened at the State armory at Ansonia, on December 10, 1939, extend a vote of sympathy to the people of Finland through our Representatives and Senators at Washington.

This is to certify that the above resolution was unanimously passed by the Department of Connecticut, Yankee Division Veterans' Association.

CLYDE G. BEDWITH, State Secretary.

PROHIBITION OF CERTAIN RADIO ADVERTISING

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, I also ask that there be printed in the RECORD as part of my remarks a resolution adopted by the Connecticut Grand Lodge, International Order of Good Templars, urging support of the so-called Johnson bill, Senate bill 517, with whose objectives I am in sympathy.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Connecticut Grand Lodge, International Order of Good Templars; office of grand secretary and treasurer, Victor Carlson, 16 Crane Street]

Whereas the liquor industry is using the national broadcasting over the radio to advertise; and

Whereas we find it repugnant to many families who desire to bring up their children in a wholesome, Christian atmosphere; and

Whereas there is a bill introduced by the Honorable EDWIN C. JOHNSON, Senator from Colorado, known as Senate bill No. 517, which has for its aim the prohibiting of this kind of advertising: Be it therefore

Resolved, That we, the Connecticut Grand Lodge of the International Order of Good Templars, petition our honorable Senators and Congressmen to use their voice and vote in support of said bill; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to each Senator and Congressman from the State of Connecticut.

Connecticut Grand Lodge this date assembled in New Britain, Conn., September 10, 1939.

By CARL W. TALLBERG,
Grand Chief Templar.

VICTOR CARLSON,
Grand Secretary and Treasurer.

CERTAIN APPOINTMENTS TO MILITARY ACADEMY

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, existing law provides that 40 selections for cadetships at West Point shall be made from among the sons of officers or enlisted men who were in the World War and died prior to July 1, 1921. By reason of the lapse of time it will be impossible, of course, to find young men of the proper age after 1943, and for the last 4 or 5 years it has been possible to secure only a very few to fill that quota. At this time there exists, of course, the necessity of filling the authorized quota at West Point. I make these remarks because I contemplate being out of the city for a few days. I introduce a bill providing that the 40 cadetships referred to may be filled one-half from the enlisted men of the United States Army and one-half from enlisted men in the National Guard.

The bill (S. 3035) authorizing certain appointments to the United States Military Academy to fill cadetships heretofore created was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. In connection with the bill just introduced by me I ask to have printed in the RECORD, as part of my remarks, a letter from the distinguished chairman of the Military Affairs Committee of the Senate, the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], and one from the Secretary of War. The letters are in favor of the proposal contained in the bill.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JUNE 21, 1939.

Maj. Gen. E. S. ADAMS,

The Adjutant General, War Department, Washington, D. C.

DEAR GENERAL ADAMS: I desire to invite your attention to the report of the Board of Visitors to the United States Military Academy, which is printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of June 19, 1939, commencing on page 7397.

I especially wish to bring to your notice the comments of the Board on the authorized number of cadets, viz:

"Authorized number of cadets: Of the 1,960 cadets authorized, it was brought to the attention of the Board that the allotted number of 40 authorized for appointment from sons of officers and enlisted men who died in the World War has not been filled and that in the near future there will be no applicants under this category and that this allotment of 40 should be reallocated to other sources of appointment in order that the maximum capacity of the Academy might be reached."

I would appreciate your recommendation and draft of legislation if reallocation is proper at this time.

Very sincerely,

MORRIS SHEPPARD, Chairman.

AG 351.11 West Point (June 21, 1939), Executive.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, November 10, 1939.

HON. MORRIS SHEPPARD,

Chairman, Committee on Military Affairs, United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR SHEPPARD: Your letter of June 21, addressed to Maj. Gen. E. S. Adams, The Adjutant General, in which you invite attention to the comments made by the Board of Visitors to the United States Military Academy, relative to an appropriate reallocation of the 40 cadetships now authorized to be filled by the admission of candidates selected from among the sons of officers and enlisted men who lost their lives during the World War, has been brought to my attention. I note with appreciation your suggestion that the Department consider this question, and if deemed proper at this time, that draft of legislation be submitted with the Department's recommendation in the premises. Accordingly, I directed that the situation be studied in accordance with your suggestion and that of the Board of Visitors to the Military Academy.

Several bills have been introduced during the Seventy-fifth and the Seventy-sixth Congresses with the object of continuing these 40 cadetships, which, as explained to the Board of Visitors, will lapse in 1943 unless legislative provision is made for their continuation. This is due to the fact that the limiting date, July 2, 1921, prior to which the fathers of eligible candidates must have died, coupled with the statutory age of 22 years for admission to West Point, automatically eliminates this source of appointment. Most of the bills that have heretofore been introduced contemplate allocating these cadetships to the sons of men who were wounded during the World War, and one was designed to allocate them to the sons of those who had been decorated for gallantry. These measures all appear to be so very difficult of administration that the War Department has not favored their enactment, although recognizing the spirit in which they have been introduced and sharing the desire of their sponsors to provide some means whereby the dependents of World War veterans might continue to share in the benefits provided by the original act.

Careful study of the entire situation, in the light of your request, has led to the conclusion that possibly the most equitable manner in which these 40 cadetships might be reallocated, would be to divide them equally between two sources of appointment—the Regular Army and the National Guard—heretofore authorized. Existing law provides for a total of 180 cadetships to be divided as nearly equal as practicable among enlisted men of the Regular Army and the National Guard between the ages of 19 and 22 years, who have served as enlisted men for not less than 1 year. If the 40 cadetships provided by the act approved June 8, 1926, be reallocated to this other source of appointment, first admitting each year those candidates selected from among the sons of deceased veterans, filling the remaining vacancies from the list of qualified soldiers and National Guardsmen, no increase in the authorized strength of the Corps of Cadets would be necessary, and these unfilled vacancies could be provided with qualified candidates of a high order. Moreover, as the Department has pointed out in its reports on bills heretofore introduced, sons of World War veterans, whether living or dead, could acquire eligibility for the vacancies by enlisting in either the Regular Army or the National Guard for the requisite period of 1 year. Thus a source of appointment would remain open to these young men which otherwise would fall within the next 3 years, as hereinbefore explained. Furthermore, no criticism could be leveled at this proviso on the ground that it is class legislation, inasmuch as all other worthy and eligible young men throughout the country would be privileged to seek appointment from this source.

In the event that this suggestion meets with your approval, there is inclosed a draft of a proposed bill, which would, it is believed, carry the idea into effective operation if passed by the Congress and approved.

In preparing this proposed draft I have purposely omitted reference to the fact that the original act approved June 8, 1926, also affected the United States Naval Academy, at Annapolis, providing, as it did, for 40 additional midshipmen at that institution. This was done advisedly, since the War Department is not in a position to comment upon or recommend for the needs of the Naval Academy.

Should any further information in connection with this matter be desired I shall be most happy to supply it to you upon request.

This report and attached draft of bill were submitted to the Bureau of the Budget, which advises that there would be no objection to the submission of the proposed legislation to your committee.

Sincerely yours,

HARRY H. WOODRING,
Secretary of War.

1 inclosure: Draft of bill in triplicate.

DELAWARE RIVER BRIDGE, PENNSYLVANIA AND NEW YORK

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, at the request of I. Lamont Hughes, Pennsylvania's secretary of highways, I introduce a bill in behalf of the New York-Pennsylvania Joint Interstate Bridge Commission, which desires to replace the present inadequate bridge over the Delaware River between the village of Shohola, Pike County, Pa., and the village of Barryville, Sullivan County, N. Y., with a new, modern structure.

The act of Congress approved June 19, 1936, authorized the commission to construct this new bridge. Circumstances beyond the control of the commission prevented commencing actual construction work within the required time, and an extension of time was secured by the act of Congress approved August 23, 1937. Again circumstances prevented commencing the work within the time limit. Therefore this proposed new legislation is required.

The bill (S. 3036) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Delaware River between the village of Barryville, N. Y., and the village of Shohola, Pa., was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

ARRANGEMENTS FOR INAUGURATION OF PRESIDENT-ELECT

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I submit for appropriate reference a concurrent resolution, and I invite the attention of the 40 officers and Members of the Senate who are active candidates for the Presidency and the 50 Members who are receptive candidates for the same office to the fact that this resolution provides for the creation of a committee to arrange for the inauguration of the next President of the United States.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 32) was referred to the Committee on Rules, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring). That a joint committee consisting of three Senators and three Representatives, to be appointed by the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, respectively, is authorized to make the necessary arrangements for the inauguration of the President-elect of the United States on the 20th day of January 1941.

PRODUCTION COSTS OF CRAB MEAT, CRAB PASTE, AND CRAB SAUCE

Mr. RADCLIFFE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 200), which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Resolved, That the United States Tariff Commission is hereby directed to investigate, for the purposes of section 336 of the Tariff Act of 1930, the differences in the cost of production between the domestic article and the foreign article, and to report at the earliest date practicable, upon crab meat, fresh or frozen (whether or not packed in ice), or prepared or preserved in any manner, including crab paste and crab sauce.

LIMITATION ON COST OF RIVER AND HARBOR AND FLOOD-CONTROL WORKS

Mr. MALONEY submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 201), which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That hereafter the Committee on Commerce shall not report any bill relating to works of improvement of rivers, harbors, and other waterways, or relating to flood-control projects, containing any amendment which authorizes the prosecution of any such work or project the total cost of which will exceed $5,000,000; and if a bill is reported to the Senate containing any such amendment, a point of order may be made against the bill, and if the point of order is sustained the bill shall be recommitted to the Committee on Commerce.

INVESTMENT OF EXCESS SAVINGS IN NATIONAL HIGHWAY SYSTEMS

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, I submit a resolution calling for the appointment of a committee of seven Senators to investigate the possibility of investing the excess savings of the Nation in the highway systems of the United States. The proposed investigation would deal primarily with the disposition of excess savings, although, of course, it would involve the investigation of the construction of highway systems in the United States. Since the resolution involves primarily and more importantly the disposition of excess savings, I would appreciate its reference to the Committee on Banking and Currency, which I think is the proper committee to which to refer it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the resolution submitted by the Senator from California will be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The resolution (S. Res. 202) was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, as follows:

Resolved, That a special committee of seven Senators to be appointed by the President of the Senate, not more than four of whom shall be from the same political party, is hereby authorized and directed to make a full and complete investigation and study with respect to (1) the establishment of an integrated system of supersafety highways in the United States for the purpose of promoting the public safety, providing additional facilities for the national defense, stimulating business recovery through the use of excess national savings not needed or used for working capital or business expansion, and aiding in the relief of unemployment; (2) the advisability of creating an agency, consisting at least in part of representatives of various industrial, financial, commercial, and other business enterprises, to formulate plans and provide for the construction and administration of such supersafety highway system and to determine the best methods of making such excess national savings available therefor; (3) the most feasible ways of amortizing the cost of construction of such highways and of placing the highways so constructed upon a self-supporting basis as soon as practicable; and (4) any other matters which in the opinion of the committee will aid in accomplishing the purposes of this resolution.

For the purposes of this resolution, the committee or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Senate in the Seventy-sixth and succeeding Congresses, to employ such experts and such clerical and other assistants, to require by subpoena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $25,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

The committee shall report to the Senate, as soon as practicable, the results of its investigation and study, together with its recommendations, if any, for necessary legislation.

The various departments and agencies in the executive branch of the Government are hereby requested to cooperate with the committee to the fullest practicable extent in furnishing services, information, facilities, and personnel in connection with the investigation and study authorized by this resolution.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Morning business is closed. The consideration of the calendar under rule VIII is in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, a number of resolutions have come over from the House of Representatives. The resolutions relate to the death of Members of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that there have been received from the President messages dealing with certain nominations. Of course, those are matters which should be handled in executive session. The resolutions to which the Senator from Kentucky refers deal with the death of Members of the House since adjournment of the extraordinary session of Congress, and it is customary to consider such resolutions at the conclusion of the day's session.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes. I thought the Senate was about to conclude its labors for today.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair suggests that there are a number of messages from the President which require action.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think it would be in order to have an executive session unless the matters can be disposed of as in executive session.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that, as in executive session, the nominations by the President be appropriately referred.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the ordinary procedure is to finish the morning hour, and then go into executive session, when the nominations may be read and properly referred.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business has been completed.

Mr. McNARY. The Senate, however, is not in executive session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate is not in executive session.

Mr. McNARY. I insist that the nominations be handed down in the regular course, in the ordinary way.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business, if it is necessary that such a request be made.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I understand the Senate will return to legislative session as soon as the executive business shall have been concluded?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the nomination of Frank Murphy, of Michigan, to be an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, vice Pierce Eutler, deceased, and also sundry other nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

ORDER FOR REFERENCE OF NOMINATIONS AND TREATIES

On motion by Mr. BARKLEY, it was Ordered, That on calendar days of the present session of Congress, when no executive session is held, nominations or treaties received from the President of the United States may, where no objection is interposed, be referred, as in executive session, to the appropriate committees by the Presiding Officer of the Senate.

ORDER FOR CONSIDERATION OF CALENDAR BILLS

The Senate resumed legislative session.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in order that Senators may have notice, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next, at the conclusion of the morning business, the Senate proceed to consider unobjected-to bills on the calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE J. WILL TAYLOR

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following resolution (H. Res. 330) from the House of Representatives, which was read:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. CARL E. MAPES, late a Representative from the State of Michigan.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE WILLIAM I. SIROVICH

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following resolution (H. Res. 333) from the House of Representatives, which was read:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
January 3, 1940.

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. WILLIAM I. SIROVICH, a Representative from the State of New York.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I submit a resolution, which I ask to have read and immediately considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 206) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. WILLIAM I. SIROVICH, late a Representative from the State of New York.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE JOHN A. MARTIN

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following resolution (H. Res. 334) from the House of Representatives, which was read:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
January 3, 1940.

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. JOHN A. MARTIN, a Representative from the State of Colorado.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I send to the desk a resolution, which I ask to have read, and for which I ask present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 207) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. JOHN A. MARTIN, late a Representative from the State of Colorado.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE WILLIAM A. ASHBROOK

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following resolution (H. Res. 335) from the House of Representatives, which was read:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
January 3, 1940.

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. WILLIAM A. ASHBROOK, a Representative from the State of Ohio.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I submit a resolution which I ask to have read and immediately considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 208) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. William A. Ashbrook, late a Representative from the State of Ohio.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair appoints the Senators from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS and Mr. BURKE] members of the committee.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE WALLACE E. PIERCE

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I regret to announce to the Senate the death of Hon. Wallace E. Pierce, late a Representative from the State of New York. Representative Pierce died suddenly yesterday. Therefore a message has not as yet arrived from the House. However, in connection with his death, while we are considering resolutions of this character, I send to the desk a resolution which I ask to have read and for which I ask immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 210) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. WALLACE E. PIERCE, late a Representative from the State of New York.

Resolved, That a committee of two Senators be appointed by the Vice President to join the committee to be appointed on the part of the House of Representatives to attend the funeral of the deceased Representative.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair appoints the Senators from New York [Mr. WAGNER and Mr. MEAD] members of the committee.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased Members of the House I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned, the adjournment being under the order previously entered, until Monday, January 8, 1940, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, JANUARY 4, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Great art Thou, O Lord, and greatly to be praised; great is Thy power, and of Thy wisdom there is no end. We thank Thee for the blessed boon of life with all its hopes and promises. The value of this world to Thee, O God, is not in silver and gold but in good men. Another of our own has fallen. The sands of life run swiftly; we know not when the silver cord shall be loosed, the golden bowl broken. Heavenly Father, we rejoice that it is reasonable to trust the power that has made a mother. So—

I know not where His islands lift
Their fronded palms in air;
I only know I cannot drift
Beyond His love and care.

So I sit beside the silent sea
And wait the muffled oar.
No harm from Him can come to me
On ocean or on shore.

Through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

THE LATE WILLIAM I. SIROVICH

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent to introduce into the RECORD at this point a resolution of sympathy on the death of Congressman SIROVICH unanimously adopted this morning by the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The resolution is as follows:

Whereas during the recent recess of Congress this committee has suffered the loss of one of its members who has contributed materially to its work in the past and has rendered most valuable assistance in the success of the committee's legislative program: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, First, that the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries of the Seventy-sixth Congress records its appreciation of the splendid service on the committee of Hon. WILLIAM I. SIROVICH, former ranking Democratic member of the committee and late a Member of the Seventy-sixth Congress of the United States from the Fourteenth Congressional District of New York;

Second, that this committee realizes that in the death of Hon. WILLIAM I. SIROVICH the Nation has lost one of its most patriotic and loyal citizens, the House of Representatives of the United States has lost a wise, highly cultured, and industrious Member, and this committee has lost a zealous, courageous, and enthusiastic champion and supporter of legislation for the upbuilding and preservation of the American merchant marine, the improvement of working conditions on board ships, and the best interest of all of the various subjects coming within the scope of the jurisdiction of this committee;

Third, that the committee will miss the assistance and guidance of Dr. SIROVICH in its deliberations;

Fourth, that the chairman of this committee is hereby authorized to request that a copy of this resolution be made a part of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD; and

Fifth, that the clerk of the committee is hereby directed to make this resolution a part of the records of the committee, and to transmit a copy of this resolution to the family of the deceased. (Adopted by the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries January 4, 1940.)

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—THE BUDGET (H. DOC. NO. 529)

The Chair laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered printed.

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith the Budget of the United States Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941. Estimated expenditures at $8,424,000,000 are down $675,000,000 from the fiscal year 1940. Estimated normal receipts at $5,548,000,000 are up $382,000,000 from the fiscal year 1940. Recovery of excess capital funds from Government corporations is estimated at $700,000,000. The net deficit is estimated at $2,176,000,000, as compared with an estimated $3,933,000,000 in the fiscal year 1940. If the tax recommendations totaling $460,000,000 herein made are adopted, the deficit will be further decreased to $1,716,000,000. Appropriations, excluding those for debt retirement, as distinguished from actual expenditures, are estimated at $8,101,000,000, as contrasted with $8,889,000,000 in the fiscal year 1940.

REVIEW OF FISCAL POLICY

The Budget of the United States Government is a statement that reflects in money terms what the Government does for the people and what the people contribute to the Government.

In these figures over a course of years are mirrored the changing attitudes of the people toward the growing needs which they expect their Government to meet. The relatively low and constant level of expenditures throughout the 1920's accurately reflected the relatively minor role played by the Government in those years. The substantial increase in the past decade is a reflection of the degree to which the country, in response to changing economic and international conditions and changing attitudes, has turned to the Government to meet social needs recognized by our citizenship. Nowhere are our democratic processes so faithfully depicted.

In the early thirties—prior to 1933—fiscal policy was exceedingly simple in theory and extraordinarily disastrous in practice. It consisted in trying to keep expenditures as low as possible in the face of shrinking national income. Persistence in this attempt came near to bankrupting both our people and our Government.

Following 1933 the fiscal policy of the Government was more realistically adapted to the needs of the people. All about were idle men, idle factories, and idle funds, and yet the people were in desperate need of more goods than they had the purchasing power to acquire. The Government deliberately set itself to correct these conditions by borrowing idle funds to put idle men and idle factories to work.

The deliberate use of Government funds and of Government credit to energize private enterprise—to put purchasing power in the hands of those who urgently needed it and to create a demand for the products of factory and farm—had a profound effect both on Government and on private incomes. The national income in 4 years rose 69 percent, from $42,000,000,000 in 1933 to $72,000,000,000 in 1937, the largest absolute rise for any 4-year period in our history, not even excepting the rise during the World War. Tax revenues rose from $2,000,000,000 in the fiscal year 1933 to over $5,000,000,000 in the fiscal year 1937, primarily because the people had more income out of which to pay taxes. The people paid $3,000,000,000 more in taxes, but they had nearly 10 times more than that, or $30,000,000,000, to spend on other things. This statement deserves a headline.

Rapid progress was made toward a balanced Budget. By the calendar year 1937 excess of Government cash outgo over Government cash income had dropped to $331,000,000.

Unfortunately, just at the time when it seemed that the Federal Government would be able safely to balance its Budget on the basis of a national income of approximately $75,000,000,000, maladjustments in the economic system began to appear and caused a recession in economic activity. The recession was due to a variety of causes stemming in the main from overoptimism which led the Government to curtail its net expenditures too abruptly, and business to expand production and raise prices too sharply for consumers' purchasing power to keep pace. A large volume of unsold goods piled up.

If the recession were not to feed on itself and become another depression, the buying power of the people, which constitutes the market for the products of industry and agriculture, had to be maintained. To this end, in the spring of 1938, I recommended a further use of Government credit and the Congress acted on my recommendation.

The soundness of this realistic approach to a fiscal policy related to economic need was again strikingly demonstrated. In place of the $42,000,000,000 decline in national income that occurred from 1929 to 1932, the decline from 1937 to 1938 scarcely exceeded $8,000,000,000. In place of a 4-year period of liquidation and deflation, productive activity turned up within 9 months. By 1939, in terms of dollars, the national income closely approached, and, in terms of real production and consumption, making allowance for the lower level of prices, was equal to that of 1937.

The experience of 1938–39 should remove any doubt as to the effectiveness of a fiscal policy related to economic need. The wise exercise of such a fiscal policy imposes grave responsibility on the Government. Government must have the wisdom to use its credit to sustain economic activity in periods of economic recession and the courage to withhold it and retire debt in periods of economic prosperity. And let us not forget that the withholding of Government credits in time of need for political advantage is no less reprehensible than its profligate use at any time.

In approaching the Budget for the fiscal year 1941 I have sought, as in the past, to relate fiscal policy to probable economic necessities. As the Budget is being prepared we are achieving the highest levels of production and consumption in our history. The extent to which recovery has progressed, and the degree to which speculation and price increases have, on the whole, been kept in check, have made it possible for us to consider a substantial lessening of Government expenditures on activities not immediately essential for national defense.

On the other hand, employment still lags considerably below the levels of 1929. Many of our younger workers have not found employment, and many others have been displaced by the machine. We must not only guard the gains we have made but we must press on to attain full employment for those who have been displaced by machines as well as for the 5,000,000 net addition to the labor force since 1929. We must, therefore, avoid the danger of too drastic or too sudden a curtailment of Government support.

Against this background of aims substantially but not fully attained I propose in the field of fiscal policy that we adopt the following course: We should count upon a natural increase in receipts from current taxes and a decrease in emergency expenditures, and we should try to offset the unavoidable increase in expenditures for national defense by special tax receipts, and thus hope to secure, for the over-all picture, a gradual tapering off rather than an abrupt cessation of the deficit.

In the proposed Budget I have tried to interpret the wishes of our people. They want to strengthen our national defenses and are prepared to pay additional taxes for this purpose. They wish to attain, if possible, an over-all decrease in expenditures. They would like to see a reduction in the deficit but not of a magnitude that would imperil the progress of recovery.

EXPENDITURES

To translate the consideration of the Budget from forensics to national needs, I submit a summary for the fiscal year 1941 of approximate expenditures required to meet these needs:

National defense	$1,800,000,000
Work-relief programs	1,300,000,000
Agricultural programs	900,000,000
Public works and investments	1,100,000,000
Pensions, retirements, and assistance	1,200,000,000
Interest on the public debt	1,100,000,000
Regular operating	1,000,000,000
Total	8,400,000,000

This table presents, in a simple form which any layman can understand, the principal divisions into which Government expenditures fall. I constantly marvel at the glib generalities to the effect that if one has but the will to do so anybody can reduce Government expenditures by vast sums sufficient immediately to "balance the Budget." It costs nothing to make such statements, and they can be decorated to fit into the applause of many audiences.

But it is the old, old story of the man who loves to utter generalities and changes the subject abruptly when he is pinned down to hard facts.

In these headings, for example, I do not believe that the majority of the people in this country want to reduce the budgeted estimate of $1,800,000,000 for national defense. This is an increase, of course, over the current year, but it is far less than many experts on national defense think should be spent, though it is, in my judgment, a sufficient amount for the coming year.

I do not believe that the majority of people in this country want to see the work-relief programs for the coming year reduced below $1,300,000,000. This sum, in itself, covering the activities of the Work Projects Administration, the National Youth Administration, the Civilian Conservation Corps, and grants of the Farm Security Administration represents a large—perhaps too large—reduction of current expenditures.

I do not believe that the majority of people feel that the agricultural programs should be reduced below the figure of $900,000,000, because this figure, in itself a large reduction below the current year, will be barely sufficient to carry out soil protection and surplus removal operations.

I do not believe that the majority of people think the item for public works and investments of $1,100,000,000 can be further reduced, because this amount contains practically no money for new projects in any part of the country.

I do not believe that the majority of people feel that the Government can possibly reduce, by any substantial sum, the figure of $1,200,000,000 for pensions, retirements, and assistance of many kinds, including public-health work, aid for dependent children and the blind, and veterans' benefits.

The item of $1,100,000,000 for interest on the public debt cannot, of course, be reduced at all, and we should remember that the rate of interest paid by the Government is today one-third lower than it was in 1929.

All of these items amount to estimated expenditures of $7,400,000,000, and there remains only one other item of $1,000,000,000—12 percent of the total—for the operating costs of the regular departments of the Government. These are down to the bedrock of the activities and functions ordered by the Congress. If further savings are to be made in these operating costs, the Congress will have to direct by statute the elimination of many functions. And even if they should do so, the amount saved in this Budget could only be a small percentage of the total.

Therefore, those who call for further cuts should have the courage and the honesty to specify where they should be made.

National defense: These estimates represent expenditures needed to develop and maintain our normal defense preparations. They also include, in view of the current world situation, the emergency expenditures required for the War and Navy Departments, the Coast Guard, Department of Justice, and the Panama Canal.

In order that these emergency requirements may be clearly shown I have segregated them for both the fiscal years 1940 and 1941. They call for supplemental appropriations of $272,000,000 in the fiscal year 1940, and appropriations of $302,000,000 in the fiscal year 1941. Expenditures are estimated at $160,000,000 and $300,000,000 in these 2 years. This segregation will, I hope, help to focus attention on our emergency defense expenditures, and the problem of financing them. It will also facilitate the return to a normal defense program when the current emergency has passed.

Work-relief programs: For the purpose of this summary I have included the activities of the Work Projects Administration, the National Youth Administration, the Civilian Conservation Corps, and the grants of the Farm Security Administration.

In submitting estimates for these agencies I have taken into consideration the current improvement in business conditions. The first effects of increased business activity have not resulted in a proportionate reduction in relief needs. This is because the increase in employment has affected principally those who have had casual or part-time work. But there is reason to hope that a continued expansion of business would diminish relief requirements substantially.

While the estimates are appreciably less than those for the current year, I am hopeful that they will prove adequate. The Work Projects Administration will be able to provide employment for an average of 1,350,000 persons. The National Youth Administration can employ an average of nearly 600,000 American youth, and the Civilian Conservation Corps will operate 1,227 camps and provide for a monthly average of 230,000 enrollees. The Farm Security Administration will operate on about 80 percent of its 1940 level. Relief expenditures should be closely geared to actual needs. If conditions fail to meet our hopes additional funds may be necessary. I may, therefore, submit revised estimates later in the session.

Agricultural programs: Under the broad heading of agricultural programs I have included agricultural adjustment benefits, the surplus removal program and parity payments arising from 1940 appropriations.

Despite a gratifying general increase in farm income, agriculture is still not receiving its proper share of the national income. I am, therefore, proposing to continue substantially undiminished the various agricultural programs.

I have not, however, included estimates for new appropriations for parity payments in 1941. I am influenced by the hope that next year's crops can be sold by their producers for at least 75 percent of parity. I do not suggest in any way abandonment of the policy of parity payments heretofore adopted, and future events may call for some appropriation to this end. I note, however, in passing, that the Congress has failed to make any provision for the financing of these payments already made or obligated for 1938 and 1939 crops.

Public works and investments: This broad class of expenditure represents the use of Federal capital for investment in useful public works, for ship construction, and for loans largely for aid to agriculture.

While the expenditures for these purposes in 1941 remain large, a substantial portion of them arises from existing appropriations or takes the form of reimbursable loans.

The estimated expenditure for the general public-works program is $641,000,000, but the proposed new appropriation for this item to carry on already authorized projects is only $498,000,000. To obtain this relatively low figure the starting of important new projects has had to be postponed and the purchase of additional land has had rigidly to be limited. This action brings the public-works program down to the minimum goal of $500,000,000 a year suggested by me on several previous occasions, and conserves the reservoir of public projects for a time when private construction declines.

Last year, in the interests of more accurate and intelligible statements of the financial operations of the Government, I invited the attention of the Congress to the desirability of capitalizing certain capital expenditures of the Government that have proved to be self-liquidating. I renew that recommendation at this time. As before, I would confine this principle to projects that are definitely capable of yielding revenues sufficient to defray, with interest, their cost of construction. In accordance with this principle, I propose that the requirements for new self-liquidating loans of the Rural Electrification Administration be met through funds advanced by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation instead of by direct appropriation.

Pensions, retirements, and assistance: This category includes grants to the States under the Social Security Act for old-age assistance, for maternal and child welfare, for public health work, and for aid to dependent children and the blind, as well as veterans' benefits, railroad retirement benefits, and contributions to Federal employee retirement funds. It does not include insurance benefits paid out of the old-age and unemployment trust funds. This general category affects the individual security and health of millions of citizens. Its growth reflects mainly the beginning of a comprehensive social-security program.

Interest on the public debt: Obviously no reduction in this item can be made in the next year. The average interest rate paid on the public debt for the fiscal year 1929 was 3.9 percent. The present computed rate is 2.6 percent.

Regular operating expenses: This item represents the basic financial requirements of the Government. Blue pencil inroads are not easy to make. In the face of large and appealing requests for increases I have held appropriations and estimates of expenditures generally to the 1940 level or below. Where legislation has added new activities I have offset the cost by reductions in old activities.

I have carefully checked the individual estimates under these broad categories and I am satisfied that no lower figures can be attained except at the expense of impairing the efficiency with which laws are administered or of working undue hardship on individuals and economic groups. I refuse to accept the responsibility of adopting either alternative.

THE OTHER SIDE OF THE BUDGET

Revenue estimates: Total tax revenues are estimated at $6,151,000,000. Tax revenues, after deducting appropriations to the old-age security fund, are estimated at $5,548,000,000. Although net revenue collections for the fiscal year 1941 are estimated to exceed by $382,000,000 the estimated collections for the fiscal year 1940, the increase is not as large as some might have expected. This is owing partly to the inevitable lag of tax collections behind increasing incomes, and also partly, it is feared, to an impairment of the productiveness of the tax base arising from the revisions in 1938 and 1939 of corporate and individual income and capital-gains taxes.

Return of surplus funds from Government corporations: At various times in the past as emergencies have arisen the Federal Government has established credit corporations and has invested substantial amounts in their capital structures. Although these expenditures were nonrecurring and extraordinary costs, they were reflected in the annual Budgets as charges against current receipts and increased the deficits of prior years. With the lessening need for loans in some cases and the growing surpluses in other cases, it appears that some of these corporations will have excess capital funds. Currently, in response to Senate Resolution 150, Seventy-sixth Congress, a comprehensive survey and appraisal of assets of Government corporations is being carried out. On the basis of preliminary studies, I estimate that it will prove feasible to reduce the capital funds of some of these corporations by an aggregate figure of $700,000,000, without in any way impeding their operations.

In the case of certain lending agencies, any funds received from the retirement of stock will be credited to revolving funds in the Treasury and will be available for new subscriptions to stock when, as, and if needed. In these cases payments to the Treasury will appear as credits under certain expenditure items. In other cases payments will be reflected in miscellaneous receipts.

National-defense taxes: I am convinced that specific tax legislation should be enacted to finance the emergency national-defense expenditures. Although these expenditures appear unavoidable, they will not increase the permanent wealth-producing capacity of our citizens. I believe that it is the general sense of the country that this type of emergency expenditure be met by a special tax or taxes. Moreover, this course will make for greater assurance that such expenditures will cease when the emergency has passed.

I strongly recommend to the Congress, therefore, that additional taxes be imposed to yield in the fiscal year 1941 at least enough to cover the emergency national-defense expenditures in the fiscal years 1940 and 1941. In seeking additional sources of revenue I hope that the Congress will follow the accepted principle of good taxation of taxing according to ability to pay and will avoid taxes which decrease consumer buying power.

The deficit: The deficit for the fiscal year 1941 is estimated at $2,176,000,000, as contrasted with $3,933,000,000 for the fiscal year 1940. It is expected that these deficits will be met in normal course partly by additional tax collections, partly by carrying lower balances, and partly by borrowing. If the Congress adopts my recommendations with reference to taxes, the deficit for 1941 will be reduced to $1,716,000,000.

Financing the maintenance cost of certain services: I have always believed that many facilities made available to our citizens by the Government should be paid for, at least in part, by those who use them. For example, I believe that in the case of parks, national forests, historic monuments, and so forth, small fees, as low as 5 or 10 cents per person, should be charged to those who enjoy them. A start on this policy has been made. In such a way a substantial part of the annual cost of maintenance of roads, trails, and grounds in forests and parks will come back to the Treasury and reduce the annual cost of government. Another example is the $50,000,000 the Government spends annually in the maintenance of dredged channels, buoys, lighthouses, lifesaving stations, and so forth. It would seem reasonable that some portion of these annual expenditures should come back in the form of small fees from the users of our lakes, channels, harbors, and coasts. If the Congress would make a special study of the further possibilities along these lines, I will be glad to make available for such a study material from various departments.

FEDERAL ADMINISTRATION

Effective execution of the Federal program for the fiscal year 1941 and the prospect of economies to be reflected in the estimates for future years is directly related to the quality of Federal administration. The economies reflected in the 1941 estimates are the result of the cooperative effort of the entire administrative service.

Generally, we are prepared to move forward on reduced rations. In several management agencies I have recognized a condition of definite undernourishment. I have, for example, provided increases for the Bureau of the Budget and the Civil Service Commission. I believe in each we will be making a modest investment which will in future years pay large dividends. Furthermore, as I have suggested in my annual message, it is important for good administration that large numbers of positions now exempt should be placed under the requirements of the civil service.

Reorganization has proceeded in accordance with plans I and II. As a result, $11,000,000 of savings already have been impounded this year and deducted from the estimate base for 1941. With further readjustment in the machinery and business practices of the Government, additional savings will be realized. Reorganization has also brought the Bureau of the Budget into the Executive Office. With the additional appropriation for this Bureau, our budgetary procedure can be greatly strengthened. We are beginning to get more effective review of estimates. With the help of Congress we can make further progress in improving our accounting and appropriation procedures. This is a necessary prelude to better budgetary control. The Bureau of the Budget is preparing itself to be increasingly helpful in the supplying of information to the appropriation committees of the Congress.

THE PUBLIC DEBT

There has been so much discussion about the public debt that I feel that some concluding observations thereon would be very appropriate at this time.

There is no subject on which there is more conscious or unconscious deception than the public debt. People who would never dream of assessing their own position solely in terms of their liabilities do so continually in discussing the Government's position.

Those who state baldly that the Government's debt is $42,000,000,000—and stop there—are stating a deceptive half truth calculated to make our people apprehensive. For one thing, it would clarify the public mind if it were pointed out that of the $42,000,000,000 figure, the amount incurred between June 30, 1933, and December 31, 1939, is just over $19,000,000,000. For another thing, it would be more honest and more honorable for them to say that while one line in the National Budget shows a national debt of $42,000,000,000, other lines indicate that the Government has $7,000,000,000 of cash, gold available for debt redemption, and proprietary interest in Government corporations, which reduces the net debt to $35,000,000,000.

In addition, of course, there are the billions of dollars' worth of durable, tangible assets constructed or purchased by the Government that are a real offset to the debt, though never listed as such.

During the period between June 30, 1933, and June 30, 1940, nearly $14,000,000,000 of Federal funds will have gone into recoverable loans and investments and durable improvements.

Furthermore, during the same period, the burden of the combined total of public and private debts has decreased. The interest on the public debt alone in the calendar year 1939 constituted only 1.45 percent of the national income as contrasted with a corresponding percentage of 1.62 percent for the year 1933. The increase in the national income over 1932 for the year 1939 alone is far in excess of the total increase in the debt for the whole period since 1933. The credit of the Federal Government has never been higher.

The debt accumulated since 1933 represents a far more prudent and productive use of our people's savings than much of the enormous private debts piled up in the twenties.

The billions that were borrowed for speculation, for foreign loans, for second and third mortgages on overproduced commercial construction, hardly represented the most prudent use of our people's savings.

It is true that isolated debts can be defaulted without great harm to the general economy. But this is not true when, as in 1933, a large part of our private debt was in danger of default, and the savings of the whole community, as well as the general credit of industry and agriculture, were imperiled.

A part of the existing public debt and of agency loans is in fact accounted for by the necessary assumption by the Government—through the familiar "bailing out" process—of private debts on the verge of default.

In considering the growth of the Federal debt, it must finally be borne in mind that in recent years the Federal Government has had to take over some of the burdens which had theretofore fallen upon our States and municipalities. By 1933 the strain of the depression upon the finances of local governments had become unbearable. From June 1929 to June 1933, States and municipalities had to increase their net debt by over $4,000,000,000 and their credit in many cases had approached the breaking point. By 1933 there was an insistent demand that the National Government come to the financial aid of local governments.

Consequently, between June 1933 and June 1940, the Federal Government will have made available for local relief, work relief, and local public works the sum of $17,000,000,000. In addition, during this same period, the Federal Government increased its grants for public roads by $1,000,000,000 over the preceding 7 years.

By reason of these Federal expenditures it became possible for the States and municipalities during this period to rehabilitate their credit, and even to reduce slightly their aggregate indebtedness. If they had continued to discharge the responsibilities that were formerly theirs to a degree commensurate with the Federal Government's effort, the aggregate indebtedness of our States and municipalities would have been increased by not less than $18,000,000,000 and their taxes would have been enormously increased.

Debt, whether individual, corporate, or governmental, cannot be judged in a vacuum; it must be considered in light of earnings, assets, and credit standing. When the increase in the national debt is viewed against the background of what was accomplished by the growth of useful physical assets, and of effective national earning power, and by the strengthening of the Nation's credit and morale, there is no economic ground for anxiety, so far as the national debt is concerned, as to the Nation's future. And if our citizens understand the capacity of the Nation to produce increased national income and act thereon with all possible faith and practical energy, they will be in a position to anticipate balanced budgets without curtailing essential social programs.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

JANUARY 3, 1940.

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER. Under a special order of the House heretofore made, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] is recognized for 10 minutes.

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF IN MICHIGAN

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I want to appeal to the membership of the House this morning to do something to help us in Michigan with reference to our industries. Unless help is given Detroit will lose not a few, but many, of its industrial plants. The Detroit area, whether you know it or not, gives employment to more men than any other like area in the United States, and I except none. The Detroit area employs more men than Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, New York, or any of those large centers.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. EBERHARTER. I thought most of the employees in the Detroit area, according to the gentleman from Michigan, were out of work.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I said nothing of the kind. Many of the employees have been out of work because of strikes. I should perhaps revise my statement and say that Detroit offers more employment at higher wages than any other area in the United States. But since the C. I. O. came in, while we had 54 days of strike in the Chrysler plant and 44 days in General Motors at Flint, the men have not been able to work as usual and they have not been able to pay the dues that John L. Lewis and the C. I. O. would like to have them pay. However, the work is there, the wages are higher there than anywhere else in the country, but the men cannot work because we will not amend the National Labor Relations law to give them protection.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. For a question only.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Does not the gentleman believe that perhaps the reason there is less unemployment in Pittsburgh on account of strikes is because the employer looks on the subject of the relations between employee and employer in a more reasonable manner and there are not as many industrial disputes?

Mr. HOFFMAN. No. There is not near the amount of employment in the Pittsburgh area that there is in the Detroit area, in spite of the efforts of the C. I. O. Our wages on the average are higher and the employment is more continuous.

Beginning with Henry Ford, who pioneered by establishing $5 as a minimum daily wage, the employers of Detroit have always been as liberal or more liberal, paid higher wages, and given shorter hours than any group of men employing a like number of workers.

Detroit, until the coming of Murphy, the C. I. O., and the New Deal was remarkably free from labor trouble. Murphy's attempt, backed by the President of the United States, to deliver over to John L. Lewis the industrial workers of Michigan, brought about our major labor disputes.

Mr. Speaker, I am asking the House to do what almost every Member of the House knows we should do—that is, amend the N. L. R. A. so that it is fair and reasonable.

Mr. WALTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I refuse to yield.

Mr. Speaker, the A. F. of L. sponsored that law. The C. I. O. used it in its organizing campaigns. Both of those organizations, and industry, as well as people generally, now condemn the law. Therefore, why should we keep it on the statute books in its present form?

In view of the fact that the man, Frank Murphy, who denied the protection of the State and Federal Constitution to hundreds, yes, to thousands of the citizens of Michigan, has been appointed to the Supreme Court of the United States; in view of the fact that he disregarded his oath of office as Governor of the State of Michigan—we hope he will keep it as a Justice of the United States Supreme Court—we should make our laws so plain that there will be no opportunity for that Court or any other court or any board to refuse longer to carry out the will of the Congress—to protect the individual worker.

THE WRECKERS EXPOSED—WHY PERMIT A FURTHER DESTRUCTION OF INDUSTRY, A LEVYING OF TRIBUTE UPON EMPLOYEES?

Mr. Speaker, speaking figuratively but accurately, and I will speak descriptively in a moment, the Labor Board has been caught sucking eggs, robbing the hen roost, and stealing sheep.

Correctly described, its activities have aided in the destruction of more than one industrial enterprise; in bringing hundreds of thousands of men under the monopolistic yoke and tribute-levying jurisdiction of John L. Lewis and his C. I. O.

It may be that in the future, as in the past, contributions collected from the workers through fraud, coercion, intimidation, and violence by Lewis and his "goon" squads; from employees whose civil liberties are denied to them, may be urgently needed by the New Deal in its 1940 campaign fund, and that this need is an incidental reason for the Labor Board's aid to Lewis' organizations.

Why the delay in amending this law which all must now admit is not accomplishing the purpose for which it was enacted?

There is only one thing I can think of. There is only one reason for delay. Everyone knows that while strikes continue and while industrial strife is carried on the men are being forced into the C. I. O., with the result that initiation fees are collected and dues are paid. We know that Lewis, in November of last year, proclaimed that he was going to collect a campaign fund of over $3,000,000. We know that he levied an assessment of $800,000 on the mine workers. The only apparent reason for your refusal to amend this law within a reasonable time is that you hope once again to get your cut of the money that he collects through the assessments levied on the workers. I see certain gentlemen smiling. In the 1936 campaign you got $1,700,000 plus. From the United Mine Workers you got $470,000. Are you going to be a party to the levying of this tribute on the Pittsburgh workers and other workers throughout the country so that they will contribute to the New Deal campaign fund in 1940? Is that not a sweet proposition? Is there anything more wicked, more vicious, and more destructive of our form of government?

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GROSS. Does the gentleman know that in the Berkshire strike at Reading the Labor Board fomented a strike? They had a picket line, and they asked for a national boycott on the Berkshire plant.

Mr. HOFFMAN. In the Berkshire case they certainly did, and they sent out pamphlets of the C. I. O. to the customers of the Berkshire Mills. They did the same thing in the way of fostering strikes in the Midland Steel case.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. No; not now.

Mr. COX. I do not want to make a speech. I am supporting the gentleman.

Mr. HOFFMAN. No; I decline to yield.

It may be accurately stated that some of the activities of the N. L. R. B. have directly aided the C. I. O. in its organizing campaigns. It cannot be denied that the Board, sometimes by its acts, sometimes by its failure to act, has deliberately and effectively deprived employees of the right to bargain collectively—a right guaranteed to them by section 7 of the act.

Four times has the Board or one of its employees denied the right of free speech, a free press, guaranteed by the first amendment to the Constitution. In two cases against Ford and the Ford Motor Co. it has been held that the declaration by Ford that no man need pay tribute to any labor organization to secure or hold a job in his factory was an unfair labor practice.

On one occasion—the Muskin Shoe Co. case, Westminster, Md.—the Board held that the giving to employees of a speech made on the floor of Congress was an unfair labor practice. On another occasion a representative of the Board held that the distribution of the same speech by a company employee on company property was an unfair labor practice. (Eagle & Phenix Mills, Columbus, Ga.)

The Board, or its employees, on one occasion (Inland Steel), according to the testimony before the Smith committee, actually encouraged and fostered a strike, attempted to manufacture a case.

In the Berkshire Knitting Mills case, although the union had around 500 members out of 6,000 hosiery workers in the county, the Board timed its efforts, as it did in the Inland Steel Co. case, to coincide with the drive and strike of the union, and in this Berkshire case Edwin Smith, a Board member, according to the record of his own committee, sent the hosiery union's boycott pamphlets to one of the company's customers; so in this instance, at least, we find the Board aiding in a secondary boycott.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes; at the request of the gentleman from Georgia I will yield.

Mr. COX. I think in a general way I agree with the gentleman in what he says with reference to the National Labor Relations Board, but with reference to amending the act, does not the gentleman feel that we should wait until the Smith committee has completed its investigation?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Now, may I answer that?

Mr. COX. Yes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. All right. The Senate and House Committees on Labor held hearings during the last regular session. There is no one who wants to be advised about the Wagner law who does not know about it now. As I understand, the Smith committee was appointed to investigate the activities of the Board, and the committee has shown that the Board's operation of that law is rotten from start to finish. There is no question about that.

Mr. COX. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. HOFFMAN. We know that; so what is the use? If they want to continue until every "doubting Thomas" is thoroughly convinced that we ought to get rid of the Board, that is all right; but the trouble is not only with the Board; the trouble is with the law itself. We know that appearing before these hearings you have had Padway, general counsel for the A. F. of L., and representatives of the C. I. O. You have had representatives of all the big labor organizations over there. We know now in our own minds what we want. We want a fair and just law; that is all.

For almost 2 years the Board deliberately failed to call an election in the General Motors plants to determine a bargaining representative. Undoubtedly it delayed the election in order to give the C. I. O. opportunity to organize the automobile workers, to force them into the C. I. O., so that initiation fees and membership dues might be collected to fatten its treasury.

March 29, 1939, an election was held in Midland Steel. The C. I. O. was defeated. Recently the Labor Board ordered another election to determine the bargaining agent. How often will the Board hold these elections? For almost 2 years it refused to call an election in General Motors. Here, at the request of the C. I. O., another election is ordered in less than a year.

When the Board called an election of the employees of the Alpena Garment Co. at Alpena, Mich., before the union was ready, though it had had ample time to force the employees into the union, the secretary of the Board, Nathan Witt, made a memorandum that Dubinsky, head of the International Ladies Garment Workers' Union, phoned him that "isn't what we pay our money for," thus indicating that Dubinsky at least assumed that the $1,700,000 campaign contributions of unions to the New Deal had brought complete subservience.

In the Alpena Garment Co. case there were factories at Rogers City, Alpena, and Onaway. The plants at Onaway and Rogers City have been closed and those who worked there will no longer receive checks and the company is out of business in those two cities. Alpena is still open, but unless conditions change that factory, too, will close its doors permanently.

Aided by the Senate so-called Civil Liberties Committee—a committee which has utterly failed to take cognizance of the thousands of instances where workers have been deprived of their civil liberties by the wrecking crews of Lewis and the Communists—and by the omissions of the Board to act, hundreds of thousands of men have been deprived of employment and have lost wages amounting to more than $100,000,000.

The Board, acting in the interests of the C. I. O., in the interests of the Communist, Harry Bridges, and his violence-breeding organizations, deliberately established an election unit and certified a bargaining representative, when it knew or, if possessed of common sense, should have known that the inevitable result would be the destruction of the A. F. of L. labor unions which had been established for many years.

The Board, with its eyes open and its purpose apparent to all who cared to ascertain the facts, set its seal of approval upon an organizer who was a Communist, penalized an employer who exposed that fact, and delivered over to the tender mercies of the Bridges organization hundreds of loyal A. F. of L. members on the Pacific coast.

The Board, in furtherance of its plan to force employees into the C. I. O., has pauperized businessmen—men who were providing jobs and meeting pay rolls. It has driven industrial plants from one city to another. As illustrations, I cite Akron, Ohio, and Detroit, Mich.

It has caused hundreds of men to lose their jobs and fall behind on their payments for insurance, furniture, and homes. It has interfered with economical mass production, which has benefited everyone, as in the rubber and automobile industries.

It has stood behind, encouraged, and furthered the activities of those who have brought industrial strife and warfare to hundreds of thousands who were engaged in peaceful, gainful pursuits.

The Labor Board and its employees have aided Lewis, his C. I. O., and the Communists within its ranks in their efforts to establish a monopoly of labor; to enslave the men who must earn a livelihood by their toil, so that a dictator over labor might sell the toil of human beings as other men sell merchandise.

You may laugh, you may sneer at this statement, or you may dismiss it as without foundation, but the truth is that, if the Wagner law be continued as it exists today; if it be administered in the future as it has been administered in the past, such will be the result; and labor, warned as it was when this law was enacted—and one instance of that warning you will find in the United States News—of the danger of being enslaved, will find itself chained to the officials of one labor organization.

If you doubt this statement, you have but to read the decision handed down day before yesterday by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of American Federation of Labor, and others, against National Labor Relations Board.

That case establishes no new doctrine. On the floor of this House time and again your attention was called by me to the fact that the Board was depriving employees of the right to bargain collectively; that there was no appeal from the Board's decision establishing a bargaining unit certifying representatives for collective bargaining.

The decision by the Supreme Court on Tuesday was in accord with its own previous decisions and with more than a dozen previous decisions of circuit courts of appeal.

The vicious practices of the Board, the injustices of the Labor Act itself, of the sit-down and other strikes, were pointed out on this floor by me on some 92 occasions. Yet throughout the last regular session, throughout the special session, we sat here and refused to amend this strife-producing act—this act which increased the causes of labor disputes rather than diminished them.

While we were in special session the Chrysler strike began. It lasted 54 days. It was conceived and carried on by those who, because of the Wagner Act and the manner in which it has been administered by the Board, believed they could compel the Chrysler Corporation to employ only members of its union and to collect from those members dues and special assessments fixed by the international executive committee.

That strike, lasting, as stated, 54 days, threw out of work some 58,000 Chrysler employees and some 92,000 men in allied industries. It was a slow-down strike, in which a few workers, listening to racketeers, refused to deliver the work for which they received pay—in short, a slow-down strike, which has become the fashion.

The Chrysler workers gained an increase in pay which is equivalent to $3,654,000 in 12 months. They and the other 92,000 idle workers who were thrown out of their jobs by the strike lost, in less than 2 months, $48,600,000. Throughout the country, the length and breadth of this land, automobile dealers, garage men, and their employees lost wages and profits which they otherwise would have made.

General Motors may soon be faced with another strike. Are we to sit here idle in Congress, permit the administration to dismiss two of the members of the present Board as burnt offerings to appease the wrath, the justifiable public indignation, which has grown out of the nefarious activities of this Board?

Or are we to take up our responsibilities like true representatives of the people, abolish the Board, and proceed, within the next week or two, to consider the long overdue amendments to the Wagner law?

Extensive hearings were held before the Senate and House Labor Committees during the last regular session. Much testimony was taken. Experience has demonstrated that the application of the law, instead of answering its purpose, that is, diminishing the causes of labor disputes which affect interstate and foreign commerce, has increased such disputes. Everyone who cared to advise himself was well aware of that fact before the hearings before the Labor Committees began.

A knowledge of the law's defects, of the pernicious effect of the law, is so widespread that more than 75 percent of our people who have any knowledge of the subject advocate its amendment.

Sponsored by the A. F. of L., the result of the application of the law has been so unjust that it now threatens the very existence of its creator.

The law is so rotten that the chief beneficiary of the Board's activities, the C. I. O., now condemns some of the activities of its administrative body.

We now know that the public generally, that those who give employment, that those who work who are not members of unions, that the members of the A. F. of L. and many of the members of the C. I. O. demand changes in this law.

Just why should we longer delay? What excuse have we for permitting the continuance of this destructive force? Why not do what we can here to prevent, if possible, another strike in General Motors, the impending strike in Midland Steel; to end the 52 strikes which were in existence in the Detroit area alone when the Chrysler strike was settled last November?

Why wait for the report of the Smith committee? Continued hearings will but show further evidences of unfairness, of bias, of prejudice, of acts depriving citizens of their civil liberties.

That committee has already spread upon the record from the files of the Board itself evidence sufficient to utterly destroy all confidence in the present Board; to show that the law must be amended.

Will we not be remiss in our duties if we permit the present situation to continue; more industries to be forced to the wall; more factories to be driven from one city to another; more men, some now not too well paid, to be compelled to part with a portion of their earnings to some labor organization?

Why not call upon the Labor Committee to bring in a bill, or, failing in that, by petition take from the clerk's desk the bill which I introduced at the last session; amend it as the House sees fit and without delay pass a fair and just labor law? [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. Under a previous special order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] is recognized for 10 minutes.

EXPENDITURES OF THE GOVERNMENT

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, first I want to wish each and every Member of the House of Representatives the most prosperous and happy New Year he has had in all his life.

Second, I wish to give the Members of the House of Representatives this admonition, "Where are you going to get the money?" [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I have just listened to the address of the President of the United States on the Budget, read by the Clerk of the House. While he stated in his closing remarks that we should have no anxiety regarding our national debt, it seems to me we are in bad shape now. When the President of the United States says that we should have no anxiety in regard to our national debt, as far as the executive branch of this Government is concerned, it is a pity for the American people. Has Mr. Roosevelt forgotten all of his pre-election promises made to the American people in 1932? Has Mr. Roosevelt forgotten the statements he made regarding a balanced Budget the first 2 years as President? Why the change of attitude? Why the change of mind? He has never explained either to the American people. Instead he has completely changed. In other words he has fallen over backwards. He has repudiated his promises of 1932. No truer words were ever uttered than these by Mr. Roosevelt at Pittsburgh, Pa., October 19, 1932.

The credit of the family depends chiefly upon whether that family is living within its income. And that is equally true of the Nation. If the Nation is living within its income, its credit is good.

If Government lives beyond its income for a year or two, it can usually borrow temporarily at reasonable rates. But if, like a spendthrift, it throws discretion to the winds and is willing to make no sacrifice at all in spending; if it extends its taxing to the limit of the people's power to pay and continues to pile up deficits, then it is on the road to bankruptcy. (Speech, Pittsburgh, Pa., October 19, 1932.)

I want to call your attention first to a statement made by the President of the United States at Sioux City, Iowa, on September 29, 1932, and I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to insert the statement in the RECORD at this point.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. COLE of Maryland). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The statement referred to follows:

We are not getting an adequate return for the money we are spending in Washington; or, to put it another way, we are spending altogether too much money for Government services that are neither practical nor necessary. And then, in addition to that, we are attempting too many functions. We need to simplify what the Federal Government is giving to the people.

I accuse the present administration of being the greatest spending administration in peacetime in all our history. It is an administration that has piled bureau on bureau, commission on commission, and has failed to anticipate the dire needs and the reduced earning power of the people. Bureaus and bureaucrats, commissions and commissioners have been retained at the expense of the taxpayer. (Speech, Sioux City, Iowa, September 29, 1932.)

Mr. RICH. This was a sound, sane, sensible statement made as a pre-election promise to the American people by Mr. Roosevelt. His record is three times as bad as the one he was criticizing.

Mr. Speaker, I also wish to call attention to a charge of the President of the United States, made in his address to the Members of Congress on March 10, 1933, and I quote from the President's remarks:

And on my part I ask you very simply to assign to me the task of reducing the annual operating expenses of our National Government. We must move with a direct and resolute purpose now. The Members of Congress and I are pledged to immediate economy. When a great danger threatens our basic security, it is my duty to advise Congress of the way to preserve it. In so doing I must be fair not only to the few but to the many. It is in this spirit that I appeal to you. If the Congress chooses to vest me with this responsibility, it will be exercised in a spirit of justice to all, of sympathy to those who are in need, and of maintaining inviolate the basic welfare of the United States.

The Members of Congress and the country at large know what has transpired since the President of the United States made that address in 1933. You know and I know that we have set up more bureaus of government than had been set up in any five administrations previous to the present occupant of the White House, and Mr. Franklin D. Roosevelt is the greatest spender and splurger of any President ever to occupy the White House.

Let me now call your attention to just what the national deficit has been, notwithstanding the address that was just read by the Clerk a few minutes ago, wherein the President stated that we only have a national debt of some $35,000,000,000. He is wrong again. Let me call your attention to the statement made by Mr. Morgenthau, Secretary of the Treasury, and an appointee of the President. In the Government statement, issued on December 28, Mr. Morgenthau shows that our national deficit is $41,935,122,825.52.

Now, how can you reconcile those figures of the Secretary of the Treasury with the statement made by the President?

I also wish to call the attention of the Members of the House to the deficit that has been created by the present occupant of the White House, Mr. Franklin D. Roosevelt, notwithstanding the fact he was going to reduce the number of bureaus and cut down the operating costs of government.

GREATEST DEFICIT OF ANY PRESIDENT

In 1933 Mr. Roosevelt put the country in the red $892,000,000; in 1934 the deficit was $3,409,000,000; in 1935 the deficit was $2,938,000,000; in 1936 the deficit was $4,361,000,000; in 1937 the deficit was $2,707,000,000; in 1938 the deficit was $1,459,000,000; and last year, 1939, the deficit was $3,685,000,000; while up to December 28 of this year, beginning July 1, which is less than half a year, we went in the red $1,991,884,000. This shows that by the end of the present fiscal year, closing on June 30, 1940, we will be about $4,000,000,000 in the red. This will make a debt created by Mr. Roosevelt of over $23,000,000,000.

This is a sad picture for the American people to face, and as the President stated in his Budget message a few minutes ago, regarding his accomplishments, if all those things he has given to the American people had been paid for we might look upon that as a real achievement, but when we realize that every dollar of this indebtedness has been created as a national debt and that we are looking to the future generations to pay the bills of this administration, then it is indeed a sad, sad picture. When I think of trying to take from the generations that are to follow payment for the things that this administration has created, it seems nothing more or less than highway robbery. It is nothing more or less than stealing from future generations in order to pay the obligations that the Roosevelt New Deal administration has been creating.

I have not heard anything said by the responsible heads of the administration, outside of the President, about reduction of the national debt. Where is the Speaker, the majority leader, the chairman of Appropriations, and the chairmen of other committees? Why not have them assume some obligation or responsibility?

Last year we had several reorganization bills here, and the President of the United States gave as the reason he wanted such reorganization bills passed was because of efficiency in government and also the fact that we could save from $10,000,000 to $20,000,000 a year by putting them into effect, but let me call your attention to the fact that the pay roll of the executive branch of the Government in the month of April of last year was $132,426,000.

For the month of August, after the reorganization, the executive overhead was $141,670,000, or an increase in that month of $8,244,000. That shows that we will be in the red for the executive branch of the Government alone about $100,000,000 a year, and that is the reorganization that we put into effect last year to effect economy. That is terrible to think about, when the President stated his real object in changing was to effect an efficiency and economy in Government. This is what he said when he requested the reorganization—and I quote the President's words from his message to Congress on April 25, 1939:

The reduction of administrative expenditures which is probable will be brought about by the taking effect of the reorganizations as specified in this plan is estimated, as early as may be, at between $15,000,000 and $20,000,000 annually, a substantial lowering of the existing overhead. Certain of these economies can be brought about almost immediately, others will require a painstaking and a gradual readjustment in the machinery and business practices of the Government.

He led you to believe that he was going to reorganize for the purpose of economy, and now you find out that the first month shows that the deficit for the executive branch alone of the Government will be $100,000,000 a year more. It is almost unbelievable. It is a national tragedy to have such Government operation, such supervision. We have a statute on the books prohibiting an increase in the national debt of over $45,000,000,000. You are about up to that point now. Somebody has to extend that limitation, or the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States is going to find he will be disobeying the law, or else functions of government will cease, and we will go into a dictatorship. It is going to be your responsibility to do it. Members of Congress should hesitate to do this until they know that the President, who gave the assurance and made the assertions in preelection campaign speeches to do certain things in respect to economy, will do what he said at that time. They should determine whether he is going to do that or pass the buck—and he did when he sent up this Budget message read to you in the House a few minutes ago. It should be studied, it should be acted upon in an intelligent manner. We should do this:

First. Take away from the President the power that Congress granted him that should remain in the hands of Congress.

Second. Take the Government out of business and keep it out.

Third. Put all relief measures in the hands of the States to administer directly on a 25- to 75-percent basis, Government and State.

Fourth. Protect American agriculture, labor, and manufacturers with a protective tariff and do away with the reciprocal-trade agreements; keep the best markets in the world for our own farmers and labor.

Fifth. Cut out many of the recently set up New Deal Government agencies, which should take from the Government pay rolls many of the political plums.

Sixth. Change the Wagner Act and the National Labor Relations Board, granting labor and capital equal rights.

Seventh. Encourage industry which will give twice the employment that the Government can to its citizens.

Eighth. Decrease expenses or increase taxes before the crash. This will restore confidence, put capital to work, and restore us to a sound working basis for economic security and will continue to perpetuate our form of government and our national security. Do it before it is too late.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. COLE of Maryland). The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

FLORIDA TANGERINES

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, through the courtesy of the Florida Citrus Commission I have had placed in the cloak rooms some tangerines and some sacks, called Tangey Claus sacks, a novelty put forth during the Christmas holidays. Candor requires me to admit that while a great number of the tangerines were raised in my district, some were also raised in the district of my colleague [Mr. HENDRICKS]. I hope gentlemen will enjoy the tangerines.

"WE WON'T BE OVER THERE"

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Speaker, last fall Congress was called into special session for the express purpose of amending the Neutrality Act. The act was amended in an effort to best serve the purposes of the United States in a sincere desire to maintain a strict neutrality.

The expression of the Congress then, that we never again intend to send another American boy to foreign fields to fight, struck a chord of like determination and hope on the part of our entire population.

There remains, however, one thing which the people of our country fear may cause us to alter our best intentions, and that is the force and effect of propaganda. In order that we shall not again be lead into the paths of 1917-18, we must be always alert and awake to the dangers of this evil.

One of the best declarations of the thought and feeling on the part of all of us has been summed up, I think, in a new song recently written by two constituents of mine. You will recall the force and effect during the World War of the song Over There, as it rolled from the throats and lips of our patriotic citizens. That song served its desired purpose. Now there is another song, which I hope will become as popular, and will be soon sung throughout the length and breadth of this land. This song is entitled "We Won't Be Over." Listen as I read the words—

Verse:

It's in the air, it's in the air; we can hear the bugle calling over there. But—

(1) Chorus:

We won't be over, we won't be over;
No; we won't be over 'til it's over, over there.
We won't be over, we won't be over,
'Til it's over, over there.
Tell the gals in gay Paree;
The boys in Leicester Square,
We think they're swell
We wish them well
But we just won't be there.
Oh, we helped to lick the Kaiser,
Now we're sadder but we're wiser
And we won't be over
'Til it's over, over there.

(2) Chorus:

We won't be over, we won't be over
No; we won't be over 'til it's over, over there.
We won't be over, we won't be over,
'Til it's over, over there.
If you want to float a loan
We'll shake your hands and say
That we no speak the English,
We no parlez vous Français.
Once we sang "ol' Tipperary,"
Now we're singing "cash and carry"
And we won't be over
'Til it's over, over there.

(3) Chorus:

We won't be over, we won't be over
No; we won't be over 'til it's over, over there.
We won't be over, we won't be over,
'Til it's over, over there.
We'll stay at home and mind our own
For we've a job to do
We'll lick the "isms," one by one,
For "old red, white, and blue."
We'll sit on our veranda,
And we'll read your propaganda
But we won't be over 'til it's over, over there.

(4) Chorus:

We won't be over, we won't be over
No; we won't be over 'til it's over, over there.
We won't be over, we won't be over,
'Til it's over, over there.
Not a single mother's son
We'll send to face a gun
We have our share in Flanders Field,
We loved them, every one.
We've a million gold-star mothers
And we don't want any others
So we won't be over 'til it's over, over there.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LEMKE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE WALLACE E. PIERCE

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, it is my sad duty to announce the death of Hon. WALLACE E. PIERCE, a Member of the House of Representatives from the State of New York. At a later date I shall ask the House to set aside a day on which tribute may be paid to the life, character, and public services of our distinguished colleague. At this time I offer the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 339

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. WALLACE E. PIERCE, a Representative from the State of New York.

Resolved, That a committee of four Members of the House, with such Members of the Senate as may be joined, be appointed to attend the funeral.

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms of the House be authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary for carrying out the provision of these resolutions and that the necessary expenses in connection therewith be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair announces the following committee, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CULKIN, Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Mr. LEONARD W. HALL, Mr. MONKIEWICZ.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the remainder of the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT

Accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 14 minutes p. m.), in accordance with the order heretofore made, the House adjourned until Monday, January 8, 1940, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS

There will be a hearing Monday, January 8, 1940, at 10:30 a. m., before the Committee on Naval Affairs, on H. R. 7665, to establish the composition of the United States Navy, to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels, and for other purposes.

COMMITTEE ON MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES

The Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries will hold hearings at 10 a. m., on the following dates on the matters named:

Tuesday, January 9, 1940:

H. R. 7420, to amend laws for preventing collisions of vessels. (Relating to anchorage lights.)

H. R. 7339, to exempt sail vessels from the provisions of section 13 of the act of March 4, 1915, as amended, requiring the manning of certain merchant vessels by able seamen, and for other purposes.

Tuesday, January 16, 1940:

H. R. 6130, to provide for mandatory or compulsory inspection and permissive or voluntary grading of fish, fishery products, fishery byproducts, shellfish, crustacea, seaweeds, and all other aquatic forms of animal and vegetable life, and the products and byproducts thereof, and for other purposes.

Tuesday, January 23, 1940:

H. R. 200, to amend section 4370 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 46, sec. 316).

Thursday, January 25, 1940:

The following hearing was at first scheduled for Friday, January 5; however, it has since been postponed until the above date, Thursday, January 25, at 10 a. m.:

H. R. 7357, to amend section 4472 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 46, sec. 465) to provide for the safe carriage of explosive or other dangerous or semidangerous articles or substances on board vessels; to make more effective the provisions of the International Convention for Safety of Life at Sea, 1929, relating to the carriage of dangerous goods; and for other purposes.

Tuesday, February 6, 1940:

H. R. 7527, to make effective the provisions of the Minimum Age (sea) Convention (revised), 1936, and for other purposes.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1180. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting the draft of a proposed bill to authorize the sale of fuel, electric current, and water at isolated naval stations; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

1181. A letter from the Chairman, United States Maritime Commission, transmitting a report on claims arbitrated or settled between October 16, 1938, and October 15, 1939; to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

1182. A letter from the Acting Comptroller General of the United States, transmitting report and recommendation to Congress concerning the claim of Morrison-Knudsen Co., Inc., and W. C. Cole, against the United States with request that you lay the same before the House of Representatives; to the Committee on Claims.

1183. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a statement of the fiscal affairs of all Indian tribes for whose benefit expenditures from public or tribal funds were made during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1939; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

1184. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting the Annual Report of the Secretary of War for 1939; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Under clause 2 of rule XXII, the Committee on Pensions was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7577) granting a pension to Isabel Lawhorn, and the same was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

SENATE

MONDAY, JANUARY 8, 1940

The Chaplain, Rev. Z. Barney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God of Grace, whose righteousness ruleth even in the darkness, the darkness that so oft bewilders us with its phantoms of doubt and denial: Be Thou our abiding calm assurance that at the heart of life goodness reigns; that Thy ways are true and righteous altogether; and that Thy dwelling place is light without the shadow of a cloud. Revive in us a true appreciation of the beauty of our world in its natural and moral order, in the works of men whom Thou inspirest, in the deeds of men who seem to have a genius for virtue, that, in conformity to Thy will, we may show forth the love that blesses him who gives and him who doth receive. Be with us here through all life's changes; nourish in us the life immortal, and lead us in the way everlasting, that from our last mortal change we may wake to life in its full fruition with Thee, our Father, and with Him who died for us, over whom death hath no more dominion, Jesus Christ, Thy Son, our Lord. Amen.

REPORT OF ADMINISTRATOR OF THE WAGE AND HOUR DIVISION (S. DOC. NO. 142)

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Department of Labor, to which he calls the attention of the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I move that the report transmitted by the communication be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor and that it be printed as a Senate document, with illustrations.

In order that the Senate may understand this rather peculiar request, I ask that the letter which I send to the desk may be made a part of the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the report will be printed, with illustrations, and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, as requested by the Senator from Utah, and, without objection, the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter referred to is as follows:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF LABOR, WAGE AND HOUR DIVISION,

Washington, January 5, 1940.

HON. ELBERT D. THOMAS,

Chairman, Committee on Education and Labor,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR THOMAS: Attached hereto is a mimeographed copy of the First Annual Report of the Administrator of the Wage and Hour Division for the calendar year 1939. I am wondering whether it would be possible and appropriate for you to introduce a Senate resolution providing that the report be printed as a Senate document. We desire to have the report in printed form, available for distribution to Members of the Congress as soon as possible, in view of their general interest in the administration of the Fair Labor Standards Act and the proposed amendments thereto, now pending in the Senate and the House.

The Wage and Hour Division is unable to have the report printed by the Public Printer by reason of the language contained in section 4 (d) of the Fair Labor Standards Act, reading as follows:

"The Administrator shall submit annually in January a report to the Congress covering his activities for the preceding year and including such information, data, and recommendations for further legislation in connection with the matters covered by this Act as he may find advisable."

Section 4 (d) has been construed to require that the Annual Report of the Administrator of the Wage and Hour Division be submitted in January for the preceding calendar year. The appropriations made to the various departments may not be used for printing an annual report unless the proofs therefor are furnished to the Public Printer in accordance with section 108 of title 5, United States Code, which provides as follows:

"The appropriations made for printing and binding shall not be used for any annual report or the accompanying documents unless the manuscript and proof therefor is furnished to the Public Printer in the following manner: Manuscript of the documents accompanying such annual reports on or before the 1st day of November of each year; manuscript of the annual reports on or before the 15th day of November of each year; complete revised proofs of the accompanying documents on the 1st day of December of each year, and of the annual reports on the 10th day of December of each year; and all of said annual reports and accompanying documents shall be printed, made public, and available for distribution not later than within the first 5 days after the assembling of each regular session of Congress. The provisions of this section shall not apply to the annual reports of the Smithsonian Institution, the Commissioner of Patents, the Comptroller of the Currency, or the Secretary of the Treasury."

Section 108 was obviously based upon the assumption that the annual reports of the various departments should be rendered on a fiscal-year basis rather than on a calendar-year basis. However, inasmuch as the statutory requirement of section 4 (d) of the Fair Labor Standards Act and the provisions of section 108 quoted above may not be complied with in this instance, it is hoped that the Annual Report of the Administrator may be printed as a Senate document so that it will be available for distribution.

Your favorable consideration of this request will be deeply appreciated by me.

Sincerely yours,

HAROLD D. JACOBS, Administrator.

CONSOLIDATION OF DISTRICT FIRE STATIONS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the president of the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report and supplemental report of the District of Columbia Fire Survey Board on the consolidation of District of Columbia fire stations, dated December 1 and December 15, 1939, respectively, which, with the accompanying reports, was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

REPORT OF CHESAPEAKE & POTOMAC TELEPHONE CO.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the president of the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co., of Washington, D. C., transmitting, pursuant to law, a report of the company's operations for the year 1939, the results of the operations for December of that year being estimated, which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

REPORT OF THE ARCHIVIST

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Archivist of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, his annual report for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1939, which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on the Library.

USELESS PAPERS IN DEPARTMENTS AND AGENCIES

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate two letters from the Archivist of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, lists of papers in various departments and agencies recommended for disposition which have no permanent value or historical interest, and which the respective agencies have been empowered by him to dispose of in any manner prescribed by law, which, with the accompanying papers, were referred to the Committee on the Library.

DISPOSITION OF EXECUTIVE PAPERS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate two letters from the Archivist of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, lists of papers and documents in the files of the Department of the Treasury and the Department of Justice, which are not needed in the conduct of business and have no permanent value or historical interest, and requesting action looking to their disposition, which, with the accompanying papers, were referred to a Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Papers in the Executive Departments.

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed Mr. BABKLEY and Mr. GIBSON members of the committee on the part of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter in the nature of a petition from American Legion Post, No. 33, of Beaumont, Tex., praying for the appropriation of necessary funds to continue the work of the so-called Dies committee investigating un-American activities, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Women's Republican Club, of Flushing, Long Island, N. Y., favoring an additional appropriation to carry forward the work of the so-called Dies committee investigating un-American activities, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate the petition of William P. Deppé, of New York City, N. Y., praying for a redress of grievances as set forth in his petition in connection with the case of Deppé against the General Motors Corporation, as shown in No. 532, October term, 1938, United States Supreme Court, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by the Alamo National Farm Loan Association and the San Antonio National Farm Loan Association, both in the State of Texas, urging that the Farm Credit Administration be restored to the status of an independent bureau, and that the operations of the Federal land banks and the national farm-loan associations and other units of the Farm Credit Administration be placed under the supervision of a nonpolitical board, which were referred to the Select Committee on Government Organization.

He also laid before the Senate a letter in the nature of a memorial from Mr. and Mrs. William F. Koonsen, of East Douglas, Mass., remonstrating against the appointment of Myron C. Taylor as envoy of the President to the Vatican, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. VANDENBERG presented memorials of sundry citizens of Ann Arbor, Mich., remonstrating against the Russian invasion of Finland and expressing sympathy toward the cause of Finland, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. HOLT presented a resolution of the West Virginia Bar Association endorsing and approving the bill (S. 915) to provide for the more expeditious settlement of disputes with the United States, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table.

RECIPROCAL-TRADE AGREEMENT WITH VENEZUELA

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to a grave injustice perpetrated upon the American oil producers, and upon thousands of men employed in that industry, through the recently negotiated reciprocal-trade agreement with Venezuela.

I have stated to the Senate repeatedly that the reciprocal-trade agreements, while undoubtedly made in the best of faith and with the best of intentions by Secretary of State Hull and his associates, have, upon the whole, done much injury to American agriculture.

It stands to reason that if foreign countries are to be encouraged to negotiate such agreements, they must be granted concessions in the way of reductions in tariff duties, for the purpose of increasing their exports into the United States.

Every unit of a commodity produced abroad and imported into the United States means there is an American market for that much less of the same commodity produced in the United States. In other words, one purpose of the reciprocal-trade agreements is to increase imports, thereby contracting the American market for American products. This is working a particular hardship upon the American farmer, who sees an ever-increasing part of the domestic market turned over to foreign producers.

But, Mr. President, agriculture is not the only American industry which is being punished by these reciprocal-trade agreements. I have just received a set of resolutions from the Kansas Independent Oil and Gas Association, calling attention to the grave injustice worked upon this industry by the trade agreement with Venezuela. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that that agreement cut in two the excise tax placed by Congress on imports of crude petroleum and its derivatives in order to promote increased importations of oil from Venezuela.

From a legal viewpoint, I believe this provision of the Venezuelan agreement is even more reprehensible than the concessions which have been granted on imports of farm commodities. I do not believe it was ever the intention of Congress that the power to grant tariff concessions on imports from abroad should include reductions in excise duties. The tax on crude-oil imports is not a tariff duty but is specifically an excise tax. I say this provision of the Venezuelan treaty should be abrogated by Executive order, the abrogation to be effective at the earliest possible date.

In the trade agreement with Venezuela the United States reduced the import excise tax on crude petroleum and fuel oil from one-half cent per gallon to one-fourth cent per gallon on an annual quota not to exceed 5 percent of the amount of oil refined domestically in the preceding year. This will amount annually to about 60,000,000 barrels of oil which should be produced in the United States and refined in the United States for the benefit of American producers and American labor.

Those supporting the agreement have made the claim that it will result in increased exports of American farm products to Venezuela. I do not see how they reach that conclusion, nor has anyone produced anything in support of such a claim except the statement of it. In this agreement Venezuela granted us 96 concessions; 19 of which were on agricultural products. These included lard, apples, grapes, pears, and canned and dried fruits, on which reductions of 25 percent of the tariff duties were granted; there was a 40 percent reduction on wheat flour; and some other items were bound at existing rates. But the records show that farm products do not constitute a considerable part of our export trade with Venezuela. In 1929 the total was $44,856,000, of which $6,335,000, or 14.1 percent, were agricultural products. In 1937 total exports were $46,229,000, of which only $3,831,000, or 8.3 percent, were agricultural products.

This agreement does a serious injury to the domestic oil industry. It does not help agriculture. It is in line with many other such agreements in this respect.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed as part of my remarks the accompany resolutions, adopted by the executive committee of the Kansas Independent Oil and Gas Association at a meeting in Wichita, Kans., held on December 13, 1939.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RESOLUTION ADOPTED BY KANSAS INDEPENDENT OIL AND GAS ASSOCIATION AT WICHITA, DECEMBER 13, 1939

Whereas the excise tax on petroleum imports were imposed by Congress in order to grant some measure of protection to the American petroleum industry against competition with foreign oil produced by cheap labor; and

Whereas the oil-producing States and the domestic petroleum industry have found these taxes an important factor in the constructive national efforts to balance supply with demand in the interests of conservation: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Kansas Independent Oil and Gas Association that we hereby protest to the President of the United States and to the Secretary of State against the reduction of these taxes under the Venezuela trade agreement recently promulgated, for the reason that this reduction in the excise taxes will enable importers who are also large purchasers of domestic crude to further reduce the crude price which is already below a proper level, thereby seriously affecting the incomes of thousands of employees, operators, and the general public in the thousands of communities where the production of oil constitutes their major industry; and that this reduction in the excise taxes actually constitutes a rebate granted to importers of foreign oil at the expense of the United States Treasury and to the harm of the domestic petroleum industry; and we also protest on the ground that Congress did not authorize any reduction in these excise taxes through any reciprocal-trade agreement; that the benefit of the reduced taxes will not go to the Republic of Venezuela nor to the people Venezuela but to a few American importing companies which, with others, control Venezuelan oil resources. This condition also applies to other nations named in the recent proclamation setting out certain import quotas which are to be allowed at the reduced tax; and be it further

Resolved, That we request the President of the United States to give formal notice, according to law, of the discontinuance of that portion of the Venezuelan trade agreement which pertains to petroleum or its products at the earliest date possible, and cancellation of the quotas outlined in his recent proclamation; and be it further

Resolved, That we petition the Congress of the United States to take appropriate steps to restore these excise taxes to full force and effect.

AMENDMENT AND CONSOLIDATION OF ACTS RESPECTING COPYRIGHT

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I am introducing, by request, a bill which I ask to have referred to the Committee on Patents.

There is upon the Executive Calendar a convention governing copyrights throughout the world. That little convention has been held up pending studies in regard to a bill which those interested in the convention have been promised would be introduced and considered before the convention is taken up for consideration. I therefore ask that in connection with my remarks this bill be printed, and that the cross-references be printed with the bill, and also that the letter of explanation be printed. There are a great number of conflicts in regard to this very intricate matter, and this document will be studied not only by the Committee on Patents but by all those interested in the law. Therefore I think this request is not out of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Utah? The Chair hears none.

The bill (S. 3043) to amend and consolidate the acts respecting copyright (introduced by Mr. THOMAS of Utah, by request) was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Patents, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 3043

An act to amend and consolidate the acts respecting copyright

Be it enacted, etc., That—

SECTION 1. This act shall be known as the Copyright Act of 1940.

CHAPTER I—RIGHTS

SEC. 2. Subject to the provisions of this act and for the term hereinafter provided, authors shall have copyright in all of their writings, whether published or unpublished, from and after the creation thereof, without compliance with any conditions or formalities.

SEC. 3. For the purposes of this act, "library" means a collection of books gathered and administered by the following nonprofit organizations for nonprofit purposes: the National, State, county, or municipal governments; universities, colleges, schools, archives offices, museums; literary, educational, professional, scientific, fine arts, or religious societies. "Person" shall include natural persons, firms, corporations, and associations. "Publication" means the authorized manufacturing and issuing of copies of a work for distribution to the public: Provided, however, That an exhibition, performance, or oral delivery of any work, including the distribution of copies thereof for the purpose of such exhibition, performance, or oral delivery shall not be deemed publication. "Publisher" means the person authorized by an author or other owner of a work to manufacture or cause copies thereof to be manufactured and to issue such copies for distribution to the public. "Statutory damages" means such damages as are provided for in section 19 (d) (3) and section 19 (e). "United States," when used in a geographical sense, includes the several States and Territories, the insular possessions of the United States (including the Philippine Islands), the Canal Zone, and the District of Columbia. The word "work" or "works" is synonymous with "writings."

SEC. 4. Copyright under this act shall consist of the exclusive right to do and to authorize the doing of all or any of the acts specified in the following subsections in any form or manner and by any method or means now or hereafter known or devised:

(a) To print, publish, copy, vend, complete, execute, translate, alter, adapt, arrange, edit, abridge, dramatize, novelize, convert, or transform the work into any other mode, form, or version;

(b) To make a motion picture with or without sound;

(c) To make or procure the making of any transcription, record, film, wire, disc, or other device or instrumentality, in which the thought of an author may be recorded, and by, from, or by means of which, in whole or in part, the work may in any manner or by any method now or hereafter known or devised be read, exhibited, performed, represented, produced, reproduced, or otherwise communicated or disseminated;

(d) To perform, represent, exhibit, or deliver it publicly, if it be a dramatic, or dramatico-musical work; to perform, represent, or deliver it publicly for profit if it be any other work;

ress of science and useful arts by securing for limited times to authors and inventors the exclusive right to their respective writings and discoveries (art. I, sec. 8).

While formalities and conditions for the acquisition of copyright are abolished under this section, attention is directed to section 14, concerning deposit of copies. Recordation of rights to use copyright works is provided in section 16, permissive registration in section 17.

Sec. 3. Definitions:

This section is placed third in order that there may be no confusion of ideas because, in the sections that follow, "work" and "works" are used synonymously with "writings."

Sec. 4. Author's exclusive rights.

This section reorganizes and amends section 1 of the law of 1909.

(a), (b), and (c) cover exclusive rights applicable to all kinds of works; these relate particularly to copying and reproducing a work in the same form in which it was created by any method or mode of reproduction or copying and the right of transformation of a work. These exclusive rights were covered by section 1 (a) and 1 (b) of the act of 1909 and partly by section 1 (d).

(d), (e), (f), (g), and (h) are provisions for specific classes of works, and they correspond to subsections (c), (d), and (e) of section 1 of the act of 1909.

S. 3043—continued

(e) To exhibit or perform the work, if it be a motion picture with or without sound: Provided, however, That such copyright shall not include the right of public performance for profit of any musical composition which is a part of a motion picture when the right of public performance for profit shall be owned by others;

(f) To complete, execute, or finish the work if it be a model, plan, or design for a work of art or of architecture: Provided, however, That copyright therein shall not extend to processes or methods of construction;

(g) To perform the copyrighted work publicly for profit, to synchronize it for use in motion pictures, to make any arrangement or setting of it or its melody in any system of notation or in any form of record in which the thought of an author may be recorded and from which it may be read or reproduced, if it be a musical composition: Provided, That, subject to the provisions of subsection (d) of section 47, the provisions of this act so far as they secure copyright controlling the parts of instruments serving to reproduce mechanically a musical composition shall include only compositions published and copyrighted after July 1, 1909;

(h) To make grants of all or any rights in copyright as provided in this act: Provided, however, That a copyright, in a motion picture shall not include the right to grant the use of its accompanying sound track apart from a visual exhibition of the motion picture, but nothing herein shall be deemed to permit the unauthorized use by any person of any such sound track with or without the accompanying visual exhibition of the motion picture.

(i) The words "in any form or manner and by any method or means now or hereafter known or devised" shall be deemed to include, but shall not be limited to, communication by wired or wireless-radio broadcasting, rebroadcasting, facsimile reproduction, telephony, television, or any other means of transmitting or communicating lines, words, points, images, or sounds.

Sec. 5. (1) Nothing in this act, nor any election to have copyright under this act, shall be deemed to alter or in any manner impair any legal or equitable right or remedy of an author under common law or statutory law other than this act, to claim the paternity of his work as well as the right to object to every deformation, mutilation, or other modification of the said work which may be prejudicial to his honor or to his reputation;

(2) Nothing in this act shall be deemed to limit or otherwise affect any present or future valid contract or waiver in respect of the subject matter of subdivision (1) of this section.

Sec. 6. The term for which copyright shall subsist shall be the life of the author and a period of 50 years after his death: Provided, That:

S. 3043—continued

(a) Copyright in a work of joint authorship shall subsist during the life of the author who first dies and for a term of 50 years after his death, or during the life of the author who dies last, whichever period is longer;

(b) When the author of a work is not a natural person, copyright shall subsist for a term of 50 years after the date of creation of such work;

(c) Copyright in a published pseudonymous or anonymous work shall expire 50 years from the date of first publication, unless within said period there is recorded in the Copyright Office the pseudonym, if any, under which the work was published, the true name of the author, the then address of the author, and the title of the work, and unless within said period there is deposited a copy of the work in the Copyright Office;

(d) In the case of a work of an alien author not resident or domiciled in the United States at the time of creation or first publication of the work, the term of copyright shall in no case exceed the term which would have been granted in the country of which such author was a national at the time the work was created or first published.

Sec. 7. (1) The protection of this act shall extend to works of an author who is a national of a foreign country: Provided, That

(a) Such author shall be resident or domiciled in the United States at the time of the creation of the work; or

(b) The foreign country of which the author is a national affords, at the time of the creation of the work either by treaty, convention, agreement, or law, to citizens of the United States, the benefits of copyright on substantially the same basis as to its own citizens; or

(c) The foreign country of which the author is a national is, at the time of the creation of the work, an adhering party to the Convention for the Protection of Literary and Artistic Works or to an Inter-American Convention for the Protection of Literary and Artistic Works and the United States is, at the same time, an adhering party.

(2) The existence or cessation of reciprocal conditions in any foreign country under subdivision 1 (b) shall be determined by the President of the United States by proclamation made from time to time, after the effective date of this act, and in making such proclamation, the President shall give due consideration to whether (a) the foreign country involved actually fulfills its obligations under any such treaty, convention, or agreement, and (b) the principle of reciprocity is in fact carried out by such foreign country in its copyright laws, in the enforcement of such laws, and in the real and actual protection afforded authors. The President may at any time terminate any such proclamation in whole or in part.

Sec. 5. Moral rights of authors.

This section is included in the law in order to make clear to civil-law countries that in the United States the author enjoys protection of his "moral right" under common law, and that he may renounce this right by contract. Election to have statutory copyright is provided in section 45.

Sec. 6. Term of copyright.
The fixation of the term of copyright to the life of the author and 50 years after his death conforms to the nearly universal practice of all countries at the present time.

Paragraph (a) provides for term of copyright for works of joint authorship; while

(b) provides a shorter term for works of legal entities;

Paragraph (c) makes special provisions for posthumous, pseudonymous, and anonymous works;

Paragraph (d) designates the term for works of nonresident alien authors first published in a foreign country.

Sec. 7. Alien authors.

Subdivision (1) embodies in effect the provisions of section 8 of the law of 1909.

Subsection (b) covers aliens entitled to the benefits of the International Copyright Convention and Inter-American Conventions to which the United States may be a party.

Subdivision (2) adds a provision authorizing the President to revoke any proclamation under subdivision 1 (b) whenever the copyright protection enjoyed by United States citizens is curtailed or less than was enjoyed when the proclamation was issued.

(3) In the event that in any foreign country the rights accorded under the provisions of any copyright convention are limited or restricted by legislation, regulation, interpretation, or otherwise, then such limitations or restrictions may apply reciprocally to any rights granted under this act to nationals of such foreign country not resident or domiciled in the United States of America at the time of the creation of the work, and the President of the United States may by proclamation declare the existence of such limitations or restrictions in such foreign country and the suspension of corresponding rights by the United States with respect to such nationals of such foreign country. The President may at any time terminate any such proclamation in whole or in part.

(4) In the event that any foreign country not a party to a treaty, convention, or agreement with the United States for the protection of literary or artistic works accords to the nationals of the United States treatment that is substantially equivalent to that accorded by such a treaty, convention, or agreement to which the United States is party, the President may by proclamation accord to the nationals of such country the privileges enjoyed in the United States by the nationals of any country party to such treaty, convention, or agreement. The President may at any time terminate any such proclamation in whole or in part.

(5) For the purposes of this act any author who has no status as a national of any country shall have the rights provided by this act as though such author were a citizen or subject of the country of domicile at the time of the creation of the work.

Sec. 8. Subject to the provisions of this act, the author of a work shall be the first owner of copyright therein: Provided, That—

(a) The word "author" shall include an employer in the case of works made in the course of employment for hire at the instance of an employer, pursuant to a bona fide contract of service, in the absence of any agreement to the contrary, but subject to any legal or equitable rights in the work theretofore granted to any other person of which such employer had notice: Provided, however, That an agreement for a work or works upon special commission or order shall be prima facie evidence that such agreement is not one of employment within the meaning of this section, unless such agreement otherwise specifically provides to the contrary and a master and servant relationship exists between the parties.

Sec. 9. Copyright is distinct from the property in the material object copyrighted, and the sale or conveyance, by gift or otherwise, of the material object shall not of itself constitute a transfer of the copyright or of any right therein; nor shall a grant of the copyright or of any right therein constitute a transfer of the title to the material

Subdivision (3) is designed to retain reciprocal relations in case any nation party to a copyright convention makes reservations thereto.

Subdivision (5) is designed to define the status of the work of stateless authors.

Sec. 8. Ownership of copyright. This section declares that the author is the first owner of a copyrighted work, and provides for certain exceptions. It is suggested as a compromise between two conflicting views. The authors were basically opposed to the proviso creating authorship artificially by making the test solely one of employment. Motion-picture producers, radio broadcasters, and music publishers insist upon the retention of the present definition of author in section 62 of the act of 1909 or upon similar language. They suggest as an alternative language such as the following:

In the absence of agreement to the contrary, where any work is created by an employee within the scope of his employment, his employer shall be considered the author of the work. This provision shall not apply to works created under special commission where there is no relation of employer and employee, unless the parties agree otherwise.

Sec. 9. Material objects and copyright.

This section parallels section 41 of the act of 1909.

object. Nothing in this act shall be deemed to forbid, prevent, or restrict the transfer of any copy of a copyrighted work, the possession of which has been lawfully acquired.

Sec. 10. Compilations, abridgments, adaptations, arrangements, dramatizations, translations, or other versions of works in the public domain, or of copyrighted works when produced with the written consent of the owner of the appropriate right in any such work, or works republished with new matter, shall be regarded as new works copyrighted under the provisions of this act; but copyright in any such new works shall be subject to and shall not affect the force or validity of any subsisting copyright upon the matter employed in or forming any part thereof, nor shall it imply an exclusive right to such use of the original works, or to extend copyright in such original works.

The copyright secured by this act shall protect all of the copyrightable component parts of the work.

Sec. 11. Copyright under this act shall not extend to:

(a) Works in the public domain in the United States upon the effective date of this act, except as provided for in section 46 (b);

(b) Any work of the United States Government; nor shall the United States Government be deemed entitled to exercise any right secured by this act without the written consent of the owner thereof: Provided, however, That any use by the United States Government with such consent of any work in which copyright subsists shall not be deemed to cause any abridgment or annulment of such copyright or authorize any use or appropriation by others of any right in such copyrighted work without the consent of the owner of such right.

Sec. 12. No remedies shall be available under this act in the following cases:

(a) The performance of a copyrighted musical composition, with or without words, by a recognized bona fide charitable, religious, or educational organization: Provided, That the entire proceeds thereof, after deducting the actual reasonable cost of presenting the same, are devoted exclusively to charitable, religious, or educational purposes: And provided further, That no part of the proceeds of such performance shall be for the private gain of any promoter, or similar participant in the enterprise.

(b) The incidental and not reasonably avoidable infringement of a copyrighted work in the depiction or representation of current news events made or taken at, or disseminated from, the scene or location thereof at the time of the occurrence; and the user shall have the burden of proving that such infringement comes within this subsection (b): Provided, That this exemption shall not extend to

Sec. 10. Compilations and new versions.

This section is nearly identical with section 6 of the act of 1909.

The second paragraph retains the principle of the first paragraph of section 3 of the act of 1909. The latter portion of that section is omitted, since compulsory registration as a condition of enjoying copyright protection is abolished.

Sec. 11. Public domain and Government publications.

This section parallels section 7 of the act of 1909.

Subsection (a) contains the proviso "subject to the provisions of section 46 (b)" on transitory provisions, to which attention is directed.

Subsection (b) rewords the part of old section 7 concerning Government publications.

Sec. 12. Noninfringing uses of copyrighted works.

This section indicates certain uses of a work which are not deemed to constitute infringement.

Provisions similar to (a) were included in section 28 of the law of 1909.

(b) makes special exemption for the reporting of news events. It expresses the views of the users. Authors have suggested that the section read:

"(b) The incidental and not reasonably avoidable use of a copyrighted work in the depiction or representation of current news events made or taken at, or disseminated from, the scene or location thereof at the time of the occurrence, if permission of the copyright owner could not have been obtained in advance with the use of reasonable diligence; and the user shall have the burden of proving any use for advertising purposes.

(c) The making, distribution, publication, exhibition, or dissemination by any method or means now or hereafter known or devised of photographs, motion pictures, photographic, and television images, paintings, illustrations, or other representations of a work of architecture, which are not in the nature of architectural models, designs, or plans; and the owner of the copyright shall not be entitled to obtain an injunction restraining the construction, substantially begun, or use, of an infringing building, or an order for its demolition or seizure.

(d) The making, distribution, publication, exhibition, or dissemination incidental to and as part of the depiction of a public scene by any method or means now or hereafter known or devised of photographs, motion pictures, or photographic or television images of a work of art visible from a public place.

(e) The recording in any manner by a broadcaster or television for private file and reference purposes of such broadcaster or television only of any matter or material broadcast or televised by such broadcaster or television.

(f) Private translation for purposes of private study or research when such translation for private file and reference purposes only are incidental to the use of the work in private study or research.

(g) The making of single copies of an unpublished work lawfully acquired by a library if such copies are made and used for study or research only and not for sale or hire.

(h) The making by a library of one copy of a published work for research purposes and not for sale, exchange, or hire: Provided,

(i) such work has publicly been offered for sale in a published, limited or general, edition by or with the consent of the author or owner of the particular publication right, at a publication price under such circumstances as to pass title in and to the physical copies thereof; and

(ii) the publication and distribution of said edition has been discontinued and the library has offered by registered mail to purchase a copy from, and tendered the retail publication price plus carriage to, the Register of Copyrights on behalf of the owner of said publication right and such owner thereupon failed for a period of 30 days after written notice from the Register of Copyrights addressed to the owner's last known address either to send a copy of said published edition to such library or to return or direct the Register of Copyrights to return the tendered payment, accompanied by a designation of a place where such copy can lawfully be secured at said price; and

(c) limits the remedies in relation to possible infringement of architectural works.

(c) and (d) safeguard the taking of pictures of works of art and architecture when visible from a public place.

(e) recognizes diverse methods of keeping memorandum for private filing.

(f) permits translation for private study or research.

(g) purports to serve the interests of research and study of manuscripts in libraries.

(h) applies in the case of a work out of print and specifies the conditions under which libraries may copy such works.

(iii) such owner has not filed with the Register of Copyrights a notice of intention to publish a new edition of such work and such edition has not been published within 6 months from the filing of such notice; and

(iv) the payment tendered by libraries as hereinabove provided shall be deposited with the Register of Copyrights, who shall promulgate regulations for the carrying out of this subsection.

(v) there is hereby created in the Treasury of the United States a trust fund to be known as the copyright trust fund. The Register of Copyrights shall deposit in such fund all moneys received by him from libraries as hereinbefore provided in trust for the persons entitled thereto. At least once each year the Register of Copyrights shall certify to the Secretary of the Treasury for payment through the Division of Disbursement from the copyright trust fund to each person entitled thereto all amounts theretofore received in trust for such person and not previously paid to such person. The copyright trust fund shall be subject to the provisions of section 20 of the Permanent Appropriation Repeal Act, 1934 (48 Stat. 1233; U. S. C., title 31, sec. 725s), governing the funds listed in subsection (c) thereof.

SEC. 13. (1) Any right or rights secured to the author or other owner under this act, or any chose in action for infringement thereof, to the extent of the interest of such author or other owner:

(a) May be granted by way of assignment, conveyance, transfer, license, mortgage, pledge, or other alienation or disposition thereof, either wholly or partially; and any such grant may be general, restricted, assignable, nonassignable, exclusive, non-exclusive, limited in time, or for a specified place or territory, for one or more works;

(b) shall, upon the death or incompetence of the owner thereof, devolve or be administered under the laws applicable to personal property.

(2) No such grant or agreement to grant shall be valid unless it or a note or memorandum thereof is in writing signed by the author or other owner of the right in respect of which the grant or agreement is made or by a duly authorized agent of such author or other owner: Provided, however, That in any action, suit, or proceeding for alleged infringement by radio or television broadcasting, other than a broadcast of a dramatic or a dramatico-musical work or a dramatized version of any other work;

(a) the author or other owner of the right infringed shall have no remedy for such infringement if the defendant shall establish that he obtained either a written or oral license from a person duly authorized in writing or otherwise to grant the same;

Subdivision (4) without the proviso is desired by authors. Copyright users are opposed to the entire subdivision and would prefer to delete it. Should the subdivision be retained, however, the users (music publishers, motion-picture producers, and broadcasters, in particular) wish the proviso changed to read:

Provided, however, That if the grant of any such work is under an agreement to pay royalties and the grantee is not in default in the performance of such agreement, the grantee may, in the absence of any agreement to the contrary, continue in the exercise of the rights granted to the end of the term of said grant, so long as said grantee shall have copies of, or material objects based on, the work, available for sale or distribution, or in the case of a grant of performing rights, so long as the grantee shall continue to give performances of the work, and in either case, so long as the grantee shall continue to perform the terms of such agreement.

such work and of every subsequent printing of such work containing a revision thereof, or a substantial addition thereto, or a material change in the text or in the format of such work; and in the case of copies of works required to be printed in the United States under section 29 (1) of this act, unless the name and location of the printer thereof is imprinted upon every copy of such work, the publisher shall file in the Copyright Office an affidavit of compliance with the provisions of section 29 (1), declaring that all copies of the deposited work have been printed as provided for in section 29 (1) and stating the name and location of the plant of the printer in which the work has been printed.

(a) In the event the publisher of such publication shall knowingly make a false affidavit with respect to compliance with the above conditions relating to printing any works specified in section 29 (1), such person shall be denied all right to recover statutory damages.

(b) In the event of the failure to make such deposit of copies with the said affidavit or in lieu thereof to deposit such copies with said imprint thereon within the time limit, then if written demand to make such deposit is made by the Register of Copyrights within 2 years after the date of such first offering for sale (which demand shall be appropriately indexed in the records of the Copyright Office), the publisher shall within 90 days after the receipt of such demand either comply therewith or file with the Register of Copyrights in lieu thereof a written relinquishment and dedication of the publication right signed by the author of the work or the grantee or grantees of the publication rights.

(c) In the event of the failure to make such deposit and file such affidavit or to imprint upon such copies the name and location of the printer, or to file such written relinquishment and dedication within the time and after the demand herein specified, the publisher shall be subject to a penalty of $100 to be paid to the Register of Copyrights and recoverable at the suit of the United States.

(2) The author of any work protected under this act, whether published or unpublished, or the owner of any exclusive rights therein, may deposit in the Copyright Office a complete copy or manuscript of such work.

(3) If the copy of any work to be so deposited by reason of its character, bulk, fragility, or because of its dangerous ingredients, cannot expediently be kept on file by the Register of Copyrights, there may be deposited in lieu of a copy of such work such identifying photograph or prints or such written, typewritten, or printed descriptions of the work as shall be sufficient to identify it.

damages with respect to any infringement occurring subsequent to the expiration of the 90-day period specified in subsection (1) (a) of this section and prior to the date of deposit.

(b) In the absence of the deposit of a copy or manuscript of a completed unpublished work within 90 days after completion, the person or persons permitted to make such deposit under subdivision (2) hereof, shall not be entitled to recover statutory damages with respect to infringement occurring subsequent to the expiration of such 90-day period and prior to the date of deposit, unless the owner of the right infringed shall establish that the infringement is willful.

(5) At the time of making such deposit, registration of the work may be secured upon filing an application therefor and paying the registration fee as provided for in this act.

SEC. 15. When any application is made for deposit of copy or copies of a work under section 14, or to register a claim of copyright under section 17 (2) of this act, application for such deposit shall specify whether the work is published or unpublished, and to which of the following classes the work in which copyright is claimed belongs:

(a) Books, pamphlets, composite works, encyclopedic works, directories, gazeteers, and other compilations;

(b) Periodicals, including newspapers and similar serial publications containing miscellaneous matter and issued at regular intervals of less than one year;

(c) Lectures, sermons, addresses, and works of similar nature prepared for oral delivery;

(d) Dramatic or dramaticomusical compositions and dramatizations;

(e) Musical compositions with or without words;

(f) Drawings, plans, sketches, or plastic works of a scientific or technical character; maps and geographical charts;

SEC. 15. Classification for deposit and registration.

This section 15 parallels section 5 of the act of 1909. Although under this act registration of copyright is merely permissive, it seems advisable to provide for a definite classification of the works that are to be recorded or registered under the following sections 16 and 17.

Subsections (a) to (e) are parallel to sections 5 (a) to (e) of the law of 1909.

(f) is a combination of section 15 (f) and (i) of the law of 1909.

(g) is a combination of section 5 (g) and (h) of the law of 1909.

(i) is section 5 (k) of the law of 1909 with the addition of lithographs.

(j), (l) and (m) and (n) are new subsections providing for inclusion of works that were not provided for in the law of 1909.

(k) is a combination of section 5 (l) and (m) of the law of 1909.

specifications shall not be held to limit the subject matter of copyrightable works, nor shall any error in classification invalidate or impair the copyright protection secured under this act.

SEC. 16. (1) The Register of Copyrights, upon receipt of the fee hereinafter specified, shall record in the Copyright Office any written grant of copyright, or of any right or rights therein, and any other written instrument signed by the grantor or by the duly authorized agent of the grantor, and shall return such grant or instrument to the person submitting the same with a certificate of recordation attached under the seal of the Copyright Office.

(2) Such grant or other instrument shall contain the names of the author or grantor, and the grantee, a statement whether it includes any rights in works thereafter to be created or owned by the author or grantor, the nature of the grant, the date of beginning and duration of such grant, and when the grant itself specifically enumerates individual works, a description of the work or works included in such grant, such as the title or titles and the nature thereof, and when the grant includes specific rights in any or all works of a particular author or owner, such facts shall be stated in such instrument. Every such grant or other instrument executed in a foreign country shall be acknowledged by the grantor before an officer authorized to administer oaths or perform notarial acts, or before an American consul in such country, and the certificate of such officer executed under seal shall be prima facie evidence of the execution of such grant or other instrument.

(3) No recordation of any grant of copyright or of any right or interest therein shall be required, but any person may submit for recordation and the Register of Copyrights shall record any such grant or other instrument submitted by any such person in compliance with subsections (1) and (2) of this section.

(4) For the purposes of this act, a recordation shall be deemed to put all persons upon notice of the grant or other written instrument recorded as above provided to the extent of the statements therein contained. Provided, That such grant or other written instrument contains such sufficient statement therein for the purpose of indexing under section 37 of this act that if fully indexed by the Register of Copyrights as therein provided the recordation of such grant or other written instrument would be revealed upon reasonable search of the indices and records of the Copyright Office. A grantee, for a valuable consideration who records a grant or other written instrument in good faith and without notice of a prior conflicting grant, shall prevail from and after the date of the recordation thereof over the grantee in any such prior

SEC. 16. Recordation of grants. This section combines the substance of sections 43-45 of the act of 1909.

Recordation by grantees is voluntary, but will be useful to provide constructive notice. For practical reasons it is necessary to permit recordation of short-form grants or other written instruments in lieu of the original instruments of grant.

This provision in subsection (4) for and definition of constructive notice is necessary since, for practical reasons, grantees may have to record short form grants or other instruments signed by the grantor for recordation purposes, which do not give complete data for purposes of indexing to enable the tracing of certain grants referred to in such instrument, but which do contain sufficient data to enable such recordation to serve as constructive notice of other grants therein. The grantee who desires to record such instrument will thus take the risk of the same being insufficient constructive notice in certain respects.

conflicting grant regardless of priority as to the date of execution of such grants.

(5) The certificate of recordation issued by the Register of Copyrights or a certified copy thereof shall be admitted in any court as prima facie evidence that such grant or other instrument has been recorded on the date specified therein.

SEC. 17. (1) The Register of Copyrights shall issue a receipt under the seal of the Copyright Office to the person making a deposit as provided in section 14 of this act, containing the name of the depositor, the title and classification of the work, the author thereof, and the date of receipt, and said receipt, or a copy thereof certified under the seal of the Copyright Office, shall be admitted in any court as prima facie evidence of the facts stated therein: Provided, That the postmaster to whom are delivered the articles deposited as provided in section 14 of this act shall, if requested give a receipt therefor and shall mail them to their destination without cost to the copyright claimant.

(2) The author or any grantee of any copyright or of any right therein secured by this act may, if so desired by such author or grantee, obtain registration of a work or of any right therein, whether the work be published or unpublished, by filing in the Copyright Office an application for registration in the form hereinafter provided, accompanied by the registration fee provided by this act, and making a deposit of a copy or copies of the work in the manner provided by section 14 of this act, if such deposit has not already been made. Such registration shall thereupon inure to the benefit of the author, the grantees, and any other persons. If a grantee shall apply for registration under this section, there shall, at or prior to the time of making said application, be recorded in the Copyright Office any written instrument or instruments under or through which such grantee claims ownership of such copyright or any right therein.

(a) Each application for registration, and each certificate of registration issued by the Register of Copyrights upon such application, shall specify:

(i) The class under section 15 to which the work belongs;
(ii) the date of creation;
(iii) the title of the work of which registration is claimed; if said work has theretofore been published or registered under other title or titles, a statement designating such title or titles;
(iv) the name of the author;
(v) the country of which the author of the work is a citizen or subject at the time of making the above application;

(vi) the country of which the author was a citizen or subject at the time of creation of the work;

(vii) if the author was an alien domiciled or residing in the United States at the time of the creation or first publication of the work, a statement of such fact, including the time and place of first publication thereof, and the address of such domicile or residence of such alien;

(viii) The name and address of the applicant, and if a corporation, the state of incorporation as well as the address of its principal office or place of business; and

(ix) if the applicant is not the author, an identification of the instruments submitted for recordation and under or through which ownership is claimed.

(b) The certificate of registration, or any copy thereof certified under the seal of the Copyright Office, shall be admitted in any court as prima facie evidence of the facts stated therein:

(3) The failure to register any claim to copyright, or to record a grant, or to publish any work with notice of copyright, shall not affect the validity of any copyright or right therein, nor impair the rights of the author or other owner thereof, except as in this act otherwise expressly provided.

CHAPTER III—REMEDIES

SEC. 18. Any person who willfully and for profit shall infringe any right secured by this act, and who shall knowingly aid or abet such infringement, or who shall insert, impress, or affix any notice of copyright upon any article with knowledge that such notice is false, or any person who shall knowingly issue, publish, sell, distribute, or import into the United States any such article containing such false notice, or who shall remove or alter with fraudulent intent the copyright notice upon any article duly affixed by the person entitled so to do, or who shall register or cause to be registered a pirated work with knowledge that such work is pirated, or who shall record or cause to be recorded a false or fraudulent grant with the knowledge that such grant is false or fraudulent, or who shall knowingly make a false and fraudulent statement in any affidavit or other writing filed in the Copyright Office, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished for each offense by imprisonment for not exceeding one year, or by fine of not less than $100 nor more than $1,000, or both such fine and imprisonment.

SEC. 19. The owner of any right secured by this act is entitled to the following remedies against any infringer of such right:

(a) An injunction restraining the infringement.

(b) The delivery upon oath, to be impounded during the pendency of the action, upon such terms and conditions as the court may prescribe, of all articles alleged to infringe a copyright.

(c) The delivery upon oath, for destruction or such other disposition as the court may order, of all the infringing copies, records, rolls, films, prints, disks, and

Sec. 18. Criminal remedies.

This section combines and revises sections 28 and 29 of the law of 1909.

Sec. 19. Civil remedies.

This section substantially reenacts in principle the provisions of section 25 of the act of 1909 with certain changes (noted, respectively opposite subsections (d) (2), (d) (3), and (e)), concerning determination of profits, changing maximum and minimum limitations of "statutory damages," and limiting liability, upon certain terms and conditions, for multiple statutory damages arising from the production, distribution, and exhibitions of an infringing motion picture and the infringing dissemination of a radio broadcast over a network of stations, when other contrivances or devices, as well as all plates, molds, matrices, or other means for making such infringing copies, contrivances, or devices.

(d) The recovery, at the option of the plaintiff, to be exercised at any stage of the proceeding, unless otherwise expressly provided by this section, of either:

(1) Such damages as the owner of the right infringed may have suffered from such infringement, and in the determination of such damages the court may receive opinion or expert testimony, including testimony as to the prices currently paid for similar rights in copyright works of the same or like character, without limiting such damages to the prices so paid; or

(2) All or such part of the profits which the infringer shall have made from such infringement as the court may decree to be just and proper, to be accounted for by the defendant, and in proving profits, the plaintiff shall be required to prove only sales, rentals, license fees, or any other revenue derived from the infringement, and the defendant shall be required to prove every element of costs and other deductions which are claimed by the defendant; or

(3) Such statutory damages which shall not be deemed a penalty, as shall, in the opinion of the court, be sufficient to prevent their operation as a license to infringe and shall be just, proper, and adequate, in view of the circumstances of the case, but in no event to exceed the total sum of $10,000, nor be less than $250, except that in the case of a reproduction of a photograph, the said statutory damages shall not exceed $250, nor be less than $50, and in the case of infringement of a musical composition by a public performance for profit, the said statutory damages shall not exceed $2,500, nor be less than $150: Provided, however, That, for the purposes only of subsection (e) of this section, for such similar act of infringement proved to have been committed at a different place by the act of one infringer as hereinafter defined, and under the terms and conditions hereinafter provided in subsection (e) of this section, such minimum statutory damages shall be automatically increased by the sum of $25, respectively, up to a total minimum sum not in excess of $2,000, and may, in the discretion of the court, be further increased by any additional sum or sums as the court may deem just and proper but not in excess of a total award of the maximum amount of statutory damages above stated: Provided further, however, That the limitations as to the maximum amount of recovery may, in the discretion of the court, be held not to apply where infringer continues to infringe after the commencement of suit.

(e) The following shall be deemed the "act of one infringer" for the purposes of computing statutory damages under subdivision (3) of subsection (d): all infringement involved deemed "the act of one infringer" as defined in subsection (e).

Subsections (a), (b), (c), and (f) are the same, respectively, as subsections (a), (c), (d), and the final paragraph of section 25 of the act of 1909 without change.

In regard to subdivision (2), the author groups advocate the language of section 25 (b) of the law of 1909, which provides for the recovery of the profits made by the infringer as well as the damages suffered by the copyright owner. Motion-picture producers and other users wish the first sentence of (2) of this act to read as follows: "The profits justly attributable to the work infringed."

Under subsection (d) (2) the court is no longer required to award "all" the profits of the infringer, regardless of the nature or amount of the infringement or other contributing causes to the profits.

Under subsection (d) (3) the principles of statutory damages of the act of 1909 are retained, except that the maximum is raised from $5,000 to $10,000, the minimum is retained at $250, but in the case of public performance for profit of a musical composition, the minimum is reduced to $150, and the maximum reduced to $2,500.

The proviso clause of subsection (d) (3), providing for automatic increase of minimum statutory damages by $25 sums up to a total minimum of $2,000, is intended only for those cases deemed "the act of one infringer under subsection (e).

Under subsection (e), defining "the act of one infringer," and specifying the terms and conditions under which such definition is controlled, realistic consideration has been given to the

in the production of a motion picture, including the making of copies, distribution for exhibition, and all exhibitions thereof, by or on behalf of the producers, distributors, and exhibitors thereof where such motion picture infringes in whole or in part upon another copyrighted work; an unauthorized performance of a copyrighted work by radio broadcasting, transmitted simultaneously by two or more connected stations, and for the purpose of this subsection a single entire identical performance by a connected station rebroadcast within 24 hours after such original broadcast by means of a recording or a rebroadcast of the original performance, where such connected station is unable to transmit the original broadcast, and such rebroadcast is necessary in order to transmit the program to all stations connected with the originating station, shall be regarded as a simultaneous broadcast: Provided, however, That the provisions of this subsection (e) in respect of motion pictures and radio broadcasting shall not be regarded as the act of one infringer unless the defendant or intervening defendant as hereinafter provided shall comply with the following terms and conditions:

(1) Within the time limited to answer or address a motion to the complaint filed in any field action arising out of such infringement, the producer in the case of such motion picture or the owner of the originating station in the case of such broadcast shall (unless already a party) specially appear therein as an intervening defendant for the purpose of this subsection (e), and shall file with the court having jurisdiction of the action on assumption under oath of all liability for statutory damages for any and all the infringements committed as above described as the act of one infringer, post a surety company bond satisfactory to the court in an amount equal to the maximum amount of statutory damages specified in subdivision (3) of subsection (d) hereof, and file a statement under oath specifying the then known number of broadcasting stations or theaters, as the case may be, participating in said infringement by any manner or means up to the date of such statement, together with the names and addresses of the owners of such originating and connected stations involved in such broadcast, and of the producer and distributors, of such motion picture, as the case may be.

(2) Within 20 days after the service upon plaintiff or his attorney of a copy of such assumption of liability, bond, and statement, the plaintiff may elect by written notice filed in such court:

(i) To reject such assumption of liability in which event the said assumption of liability and special appearance shall be deemed withdrawn, the bond shall be discharged and canceled, and the plaintiff shall be entitled to proceed with all remedies, suits, and proceedings problem of reasonably limiting maximum liability for statutory damages in the case of multiple infringements arising from the production, distribution, and exhibitions of a motion picture plagiarizing upon another work, and in the case of an infringing radio broadcast over a network of stations. The originator of such infringement is permitted to intervene as defendant, post a bond, assume liability for such multiple infringements, etc., upon the terms and conditions specified in the various subdivisions of subsection (e). The plaintiff has the option to reject such intervention and assumption of liability, etc., in which event plaintiff may proceed with various independent actions against all participants for any relief other than statutory damages. If plaintiff elects to accept such intervention, plaintiff has the option to transfer the cause for further proceedings to certain other districts specified in subdivision (2) (ii) of subsection (e). If plaintiff elects to accept such intervention, plaintiff is confined to the recovery of statutory damages (with the minimum automatically raised as provided in subsection (d), (3)), "for the act of one infringer" as defined, but retains all remedies under section 20, other than those for actual damages, profits, or statutory damages, in any other action pending or thereafter commenced for any such infringement.

Radio broadcasters are opposed to minimum statutory damages and ask that subdivision (3) of subsection (d), on the preceding page, and subsection (e), on this page, be deleted, and the following subdivision (3) be inserted in their stead:

(3) To pay, in lieu of the proved damages or profits provided for in subsections (1) and (2) above, in the event that proved damages or profits are impossible of ascertainment, such damages not less than $150 nor more than $5,000 for all infringements by any one infringer up to the date of suit, as shall in the opinion of the court be sufficient to prevent their operation as a license to infringe, and as shall be just, proper, and adequate, in view of the circumstances of the case, but in case of a reproduction of a copyrighted photograph such damages shall not exceed the sum of $200: Provided, however, That minimum damages shall not apply to infringements by radio broadcasting or television: Provided, That an infringing performance by radio broadcasting or television transmitted simultaneously by two or more stations shall constitute a single infringement and shall be regarded as the act of one infringer.

under this act against all infringers but shall not be entitled to any award of statutory damages under subdivision (3) of subsection (d) in any such suits or proceedings:

(ii) To accept such assumption of liability and to continue the cause in such court or at the plaintiff's election to transfer the cause to any district court in which the action could have been originally instituted under the venue provisions of this act against the owner of the originating or any connected station in the case of such broadcast, or against the producer or distributors in the case of such motion picture, and any court in which the cause is so pending or to which it shall so be transferred shall have full jurisdiction to grant all remedies for infringement provided by this act, other than those provided by subdivisions (1) and (2) of subsection (d) of this section, for all infringement deemed the act of one infringer as herein defined, and in the event of an award of such statutory damages only the remedies other than those provided in subsection (d) of this section shall be available in any other action then pending or thereafter commenced for any such infringement deemed such act of one infringer: Provided, however, That a failure to make any election under this subdivision (2) of subsection (e) of this section within such period, shall be deemed an acceptance of such assumption of liability for statutory damages for the act of one infringer as herein defined.

(f) Rules and regulations for practice and procedure under this act shall be those presently prescribed by the Supreme Court of the United States for copyright causes, or such as may hereafter be adopted.

SEC. 20. In all actions, suits, or proceedings under this act, except when brought by or against the United States or any officer thereof, full costs shall be allowed, and the court may award to the prevailing party a reasonable attorney's fee as part of the costs.

CHAPTER IV—ACTIONS AND PROCEEDINGS

SEC. 21. The grantee of any exclusive right or rights comprised within copyright shall be deemed an owner of copyright to the extent of the interest granted, and the grantor shall continue to be an owner of copyright to the extent of rights owned and not granted. Each such owner, to the extent of the interest of such owner, shall be entitled, in the absence of any agreement to the contrary in the grant or grants by, from, or through the author or other owner of the particular work in which copyright subsists hereunder and under which such grantee claims ownership of such right, to any and all remedies and proceedings given by this act, and to proceed, separately, for and in the name and behalf of such owner,

SEC. 22. All actions, suits, or proceedings arising under the copyright laws of the United States shall be originally cognizable by the district courts of the United States, including the District of Columbia, the district courts of Alaska, Hawaii, the Canal Zone, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands; and the courts of first instance of the Philippine Islands. Such courts shall have jurisdiction both at law and in equity: Provided, That, when a complaint filed during the existence of a copyright demands an injunction or accounting of profits, such court shall retain jurisdiction in equity to grant any and all remedies provided by the Act.

SEC. 23. Any court given jurisdiction under section 22 of this act may proceed in any action, suit, or proceeding instituted for violation of any provision hereof to enter a judgment or decree enforcing the remedies herein provided.

The proceedings for an injunction, actual damages, statutory damages, and profits and those for the seizure of infringing copies, plates, molds, matrices, and so forth, aforementioned, may be united in one action.

SEC. 25. Any injunction that may be granted restraining and enjoining the doing of anything forbidden by this act may be served on the parties against whom such injunction may be granted anywhere in the United States, and shall be operative throughout the United States and be enforceable by proceedings in contempt or otherwise by any other court or judge possessing jurisdiction of the defendants.

SEC. 26. The clerk of the court, or judge granting the injunction, shall, when required so to do by the court hearing the application to enforce said injunction, transmit without delay to said court a certified copy of all the papers in said cause that are on file in his office. Where the plaintiff applies for an order to transfer the cause for further proceedings therein to another district court pursuant to the provisions of subdivision (2) (ii) of subsection (e) of section 19, the court then having jurisdiction over the cause shall make an order of transfer in such regard, and the clerk of such court shall thereupon transmit without delay to the clerk of the court to which transfer is directed, all the papers in said cause that are on file in the office of the clerk of said court or any judge thereof.

CHAPTER V—MANUFACTURING AND IMPORTATION

Sec. 28. Limitation of action. This section 28 is a revision of section 39 of the act of 1909.

This chapter replaces the manufacturing, ad interim and importation provisions of sections 15, 21, 31, 32, and 33 of the act of 1909.

The system of the old law was that foreign works in a language other than English could be freely imported and authors of such works could secure copyright the same as American authors, i. e., with copyright notice and deposit and registration of the copyright. Foreign authors of works in the English language could acquire ad interim copyright within 2 months from publication and had to publish an American edition within 4 months thereafter as a condition to acquiring full copyright. Failure to publish such edition caused the loss of copyright. Copies of foreign works in the English language in which no copyright was obtained could be freely imported.

This system worked hardship to authors of works in the English language who lost their copyright if failing to obtain ad interim copyright within 2 months or to arrange for an American publication within 4 months thereafter. On the other hand, labor's interests were not fully protected. Works in a foreign language could be freely imported and so could works in the English language for which the copyright was lost.

The system proposed by the bill gives a more adequate protection to all interests concerned. The ad interim copyright is abolished since no copyright registration is required for domestic works. The manufacturing requirements are made applicable to all works in any language; they are made to extend to maps and eliminate the exceptions on lithographs and photoengravings of the old act. On the other hand, exceptions are made which take care of all reasonable cases. Subdivision 2 of section 15 covers library copies, personal copies, and authorized foreign translations. Subdivision 3 of the same section makes the important exception of permitted importation of 500 copies of any foreign made work. Thus the author is not required to publish an American edition of his work almost immediately after his publication abroad as under the old act. He may "test the market" in this country by importing 500 copies and if he finds that there is a public demand, he may publish an American edition.

The exception of the importation of 500 copies is not applicable, however, to authors citizens or aliens domiciled in the United States, thus protecting American labor in the case of works of domestic authors. The sanction of the obligation not to import more than 500 copies of a foreign author's work is not the loss of the copyright in general. The author merely has no remedy against the printing, publication, or sale of a domestically manufactured work but he maintains all other rights, for instance, for other versions of his work, for radio communication, for performance. In section 16 the first and third subsections parallel provisions in section 31 of the act of 1909. The second subsection covers the case where the copyright of a foreigner has been assigned to an American citizen or resident and seeks to protect his rights against importations violating his exclusive grant.

Section 31 combines the provisions of sections 32 and 33 of the act of 1909.

Sec. 29. Manufacturing provision.

Subsection (1) is the general manufacturing provision.

SEC. 29. (1) Except as in this act otherwise expressly provided, all copies of any copyrighted work which shall be distributed in the United States in book, pamphlet, map, or sheet form, including any copyrighted illustrations therein, shall be printed from type set within the limits of the United States or its dependencies, either by hand or by the aid of any kind of typesetting machine, or from plates made within the limits of the United States from type set therein; or, if said copies be produced by lithographic, mimeographic, photogravure, or photoengraving, or any kindred process of reproduction now known or hereafter devised, then by type set, or by such process wholly performed, within the limits of the United States or its dependencies, and the printing or other reproduction of said copies, and the binding of any book, pamphlet, collection of maps, or sheets, shall be performed within the limits of the United States or its dependencies.

(2) The aforesaid provisions of this section shall not apply:

(a) to copies imported in personal baggage and not for sale or hire; Provided, That no more than one copy of any work is imported in the baggage of any one person;

(b) to importation through ports of entry or through the mails, of not more than one copy of any work on any one invoice for personal use of the consignee and not for sale or hire; Provided, however, That, no person in the United States other than a retail bookdealer shall act as the agent of the consignee in the acquisition of such copy;

(c) to two copies imported for the author's own use;

(d) to copies imported for libraries;

(e) to works which form parts of private collections purchased en bloc in a foreign country and which are not intended for sale or hire;

(f) to foreign newspapers, periodicals, or magazines;

(g) to an authorized translation in a foreign language of a work previously published in the United States;

(h) to works in a foreign language by authors not resident or domiciled in the United States at the time of the creation of the work.

(i) to works in raised characters for the use of the blind;

(j) to illustrations of a scientific work or reproductions of a work of art where the subjects represented are located in a foreign country;

(k) to not more than 12 copies of an unprinted work in manuscript, typescript, mimeographic, or photostatic form.

(3) Nor shall the provisions of subdivision (1) apply to the first 500 copies, other than copies imported as provided in subdivision (2), of any work imported into the United States through the ports of entry or in the mails: Provided, That such number of copies shall not include the copies importation of which is permitted under the provisions of subdivision (2), and that this privilege of importation of such 500 copies shall not extend to works of authors citizens of or aliens resident or domiciled in the United States of America at the time of creation, printing, or first publication: And further provided, That:

(a) every such importation is accompanied by a written authorization, specifying the title of the work and the number of copies imported thereunder, signed by the author or the owner of the publication rights for the United States with respect to said work, together with an affidavit of the importer certifying that a duplicate copy of said authorization has been mailed to or deposited with the Register of Copyrights; and that

(b) if copies in excess of 500 are imported except as provided in this section with the consent of the author or any one authorized to act on behalf of the author, then no remedies shall be available under this act for the printing, reprinting, publication, distribution, or vending of copies of such work made by any process set forth in subsection 1.

SEC. 30. (1) The importation into the United States without the written consent of the author or any authorized agent to act on behalf of the author of copies of works produced in violation of section 29 of this act is hereby prohibited, and such copies shall be seized by the Customs or Post Office officials.

(2) When an edition of a copyrighted work is manufactured in the United States, pursuant to the provisions of section 29, and is published either by the author, or by the grantee of exclusive publication rights, in the United States pursuant to a written grant recorded in the Copyright Office, then during the period of said exclusive publication rights or the term of copyright therein, whichever terminates sooner, importation of copies in violation of section 29 is prohibited.

(3) The importation into the United States, except as otherwise herein permitted, of a copy of the whole or any part of any copyrighted work, which if published in the United States would infringe such copyright, shall be deemed an infringement and is hereby prohibited.

SEC. 31. Any and all copies of which importation is prohibited by this act brought into the United States from any foreign country shall be seized and forfeited by like proceedings as those provided by law for the seizure and condemnation of property imported into the United States in violation of the customs revenue laws. Such articles when forfeited shall be destroyed in such manner as the Secretary of the Treasury or the court, as the case may be, shall direct: Provided, however, That all copies of authorized editions of copyrighted works imported in violation of the provisions of this act may be exported and returned to the country of export whenever it is shown to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury, in a written application, that such importation does not involve gross negligence or fraud.

The Secretary of the Treasury and the Postmaster General are hereby empowered and required to make and enforce such rules and regulations as shall prevent the importation into the United States through the ports of entry or in the mails of articles importation of which is prohibited under sections 29 and 30 of this act, but the Treasury Department and the Post Office Department, as the case may be, shall not be required to prevent such importation unless the copyright owner or other injured party shall have filed a written claim of copyright pursuant to said rules and regulations.

have authority during the absence of the Register of Copyrights to attach the seal of the Copyright Office to all papers issued from the said Office and to sign such certificates and other papers as may be necessary. There shall also be appointed by the Librarian such subordinate assistants to the register as may from time to time be authorized by law.

The Register of Copyrights shall give bond to the United States in the sum of $20,000, in form to be approved by the Solicitor of the Treasury and with sureties satisfactory to the Secretary of the Treasury, for the faithful discharge of his duties.

Sec. 33. All records and correspondence relating to copyrights required by law to be preserved shall be kept and preserved in the Copyright Office, Library of Congress, District of Columbia, and shall be under the control of the Register of Copyrights, who shall, under the direction and supervision of the Librarian of Congress, perform all the duties prescribed by this act.

Sec. 34. The Register of Copyrights shall be authorized to make rules and regulations not inconsistent with the provisions of this act for the deposit of copies, the recordation of grants, the registration of claims to copyright, and such other administrative acts as are provided herein.

Sec. 35. The Register of Copyrights shall provide and keep such records and record books in the copyright office as are required to carry out the provisions of this act, and, whenever an application to deposit, register, or record has been made in the copyright office under the provisions of this act, the Register of Copyrights shall make entry thereof: Provided, That any incorrect entry may be corrected by the filing of a new and correct application, as if it were an original application, accompanied by the required copy, or identifying material, and the fee as in the case of an original application. The application for such corrected entry shall also be accompanied by an affidavit sworn to by the owner of the copyright setting forth the facts upon which the request for the new entry is based. In case of a dispute as to the ownership of copyright, the United States district court having jurisdiction of the parties and after a hearing of the issues involved, upon cause shown, may order the cancellation or correction of any entry. The foregoing shall be subject, however, to the provisions against retroactive liability on the part of any person who relied or acted upon an erroneous entry, as provided for in subsection (b) of section 46.

Sec. 36. (1) The seal provided under the act of July 8, 1870, and at present used in the copyright office, shall continue to be the seal thereof, and by it all papers issued from the copyright office requiring authentication shall be authenticated.

Register of Copyrights shall furnish to any person requesting the same a copy certified under said seal of any receipt or certificate of recordation or registration issued by the Register of Copyrights, of any grants, application for registration of a claim of copyright or other instrument filed in the copyright office or of any entry in the records or record books of the copyright office, or any extract therefrom. Such copy shall be admitted in any court as evidence with like effect as the original thereof.

Sec. 37. The Register of Copyrights shall fully index all deposits, registrations, grants, and other instruments filed or recorded in the Copyright Office by the following data to the extent disclosed therein: Date of filing, deposit, or recordation; title of the work; names of the author or grantor, and the grantee, a statement whether it includes any rights in works thereafter to be created or owned by the author or grantor, the nature of the grant, the date of beginning and duration of such grant, and when the grant itself specifically enumerates individual works, a description of the work or works included in such grant, such as the title or titles and the nature thereof, and when the grant includes specific rights in any or all works of a particular author or owner, to the end that searches in respect thereof may be readily made by the public. The provisions of this act as to deposits, recordation and registration of copyrighted works shall be exclusive, and the sole place of deposit, recordation, and registration in the United States of America shall be the Office of the Register of Copyrights, Library of Congress, Washington, D. C.

A copy of any record on file or of a grant or other instrument recorded in the Copyright Office, or any extract therefrom, certified by and under the seal of said office shall be admitted in any court as evidence with like effect as the production of the original record, grant, or instrument from which taken.

Sec. 38. The Register of Copyrights shall print a monthly catalog of the records of the Copyright Office together with suitable indexes, and shall print a complete and indexed catalog thereof annually. The monthly catalogs as they are issued shall be promptly distributed by the Copyright Office to the collectors of customs of the United States and to the postmasters of all exchange offices of receipt of foreign mails, in accordance with revised lists of such collectors of customs and postmasters prepared by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Postmaster General, and they shall also be furnished in whole or in part to all parties desiring them at a price to be determined by the Register of Copyrights for each catalog but not to exceed $10 for all such catalogs issued in one year. This section 44 is identical with section 51 of the act of 1909.

Sec. 45. Common-law copyright retained.

This section 45 without the proviso is identical with section 2 of the act of 1909. The proviso is new; it specifies acts by which an author or other owner elects statutory rather than common-law copyright. Motion pictures and broadcasters prefer the entire section 45 to read as follows: "The provisions of this act for published or unpublished works shall be exclusive and in lieu of and in substitution for any rights and remedies at law or in equity, or any other provisions, under any other applicable or available common or statutory law of any appropriate jurisdiction."

any other provisions of this act, such election shall be deemed to have been exercised by, and shall be binding only upon, an author or other owner who has made or authorized any of the following: A publication of the work, but only in the event of actual publication thereof; a deposit of a copy or copies of the work in the Copyright Office as provided herein; the filing of any application to register the work in the Copyright Office as provided herein; a recordation in the Copyright Office of any grant or other written instrument in respect thereof as provided herein; the commencement of any action or proceeding in any court based upon any claim to copyright under this act; the assertion in writing of any claim to copyright under this act, or of any right to remedies or proceedings for infringement of any such right or rights.

Sec. 46. The provisions of this act shall apply:

(a) To all works copyrighted prior to the effective date of this act and in which copyright subsists at the date of the enactment hereof under the provisions of any prior copyright statute of the United States; the term for which copyright in such works shall subsist is extended for the period provided in section 6 of this act: Provided, however, That—

(1) From and after the expiration of 28 years from the date when the copyright was secured under the act of March 4, 1909 (or if the copyright was renewed prior to the effective date of this act, then from and after the expiration of 28 years from the date when such renewal became effective), the copyright and all rights therein for the remainder of the term, as extended by this act, shall be vested in and be owned by the person or persons who would have been entitled to ownership of the renewal effected under sections 23 and 24 of the act of 1909.

(ii) With respect to contributions to periodicals, cyclopedias, and other composite works copyrighted under the act of March 4, 1909, and which contributions were not separately registered by the authors thereof, such authors shall enjoy the renewal right conferred under section 23 of the act of March 4, 1909, when application for such renewal is made during a period of 6 months after the expiration of the original term of copyright secured under the act of March 4, 1909, but such renewal right shall not be conferred in respect of such contributions to periodicals, cyclopedias, and other composite works for which applications for renewals were made prior to the expiration of the original term of copyright; and

(b) to works in respect of which:

(1) A defective notice of copyright had been placed upon a published copy or copies thereof, or a defective registration of the claim to copyright therein had been made or attempted, prior to the effective date of this act; and each such notice or registration is hereby

(ii) a corrected entry has been made as provided for in section 35;

(iii) copyright had not been secured in the United States prior to the effective date of any such adherence as may be made to the Convention for the Protection of Literary and Artistic Works, but in which copyright subsisted under such convention upon said effective date of adherence: *Provided, however, That as to the works specified in the above subdivisions (i), (ii), and (iii) of this subsection (b), no right or remedy given pursuant to this act shall prejudice past or future acts, uses, or rights in or in connection with, or the continuance of any undertakings or enterprises which were commenced in respect of said works within the United States prior to the effective date of this act in the case of subdivision (i), the date of the filing or recording of a corrected entry in the Copyright Office in the case of subdivision (ii), and the effective date of adherence in the case of subdivision (iii), and which would otherwise have been lawful within the United States; and the author or other owner of any such right under copyright shall not be entitled to any remedy under this act for any act or use of the type herein described either before or after such date against any persons who, prior to such date, have taken any action or expended labor, money or any other consideration, or incurred any liability in connection with any preparation for, creation, or exploitation of, or in the acquisition of rights, quitclaims, releases, or clearances affecting such work or any right thereunder, or for any act or use of the type described in section 4 of this act or for any other act or use made, in a manner which at the time was not unlawful: *Provided further, That no remedies shall be available under this act for the making for purposes of study or research and not for profit of copies of the works referred to in the above subdivision (iii) of this subsection.

Sec. 47. (1) This act shall take effect 6 months after its enactment.

(2) All acts or parts of acts relating to copyrights are hereby repealed, as well as all other laws or parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this act, except as provided in the preceding section; and except that

(a) Nothing in this act shall be construed to annul or limit any vested right of the author or other owner of a statutory copyright during the original term, or any renewal thereof, under the statutes which secured such copyright or renewal, where such vested right subsists on the effective date of this act.

(b) Nothing in this act shall affect causes of action for infringement of copyright committed before the effective date of this act, which shall then be pending in the courts of the

The letter of explanation presented by Mr. THOMAS of Utah is as follows:

NATIONAL COMMITTEE OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA
ON INTERNATIONAL INTELLECTUAL COOPERATION,
New York, N. Y., December 16, 1939.

Copy of letter-memorandum for Committee on Patents of the Senate and Committee on Patents of the House of Representatives on an act to amend and consolidate the acts respecting copyright.

The committee for the study of copyright submits herewith a draft of a bill to amend and consolidate the acts concerning copyright. This committee was set up in January 1938 by one of the foundations to study ways and means of promoting copyright relations between the United States and foreign countries, particularly Latin-American. Early in its investigations, the committee concluded that the revision of domestic legislation in the United States was a prerequisite to its main objective. The committee accordingly proposed to representatives of various groups of interests concerned in copyright that they attempt an adjustment of their conflicting views and interests through round-table discussions concerning the principles and provisions of a new copyright act.

This proposed bill is the result of such round-table discussions held under the auspices of the committee for the study of copyright extending for nearly 16 months past. At these conferences on copyright legislation the committee gathered together representatives of the following groups and interests concerned in copyright:

Authors' League of America.
American Society of Composers, Authors, and Publishers.
Song Writers' Protective Association.
International Allied Printing Trade Association.
Book Publishers Bureau.
National Publishers' Association.
Librarians.
The Joint Committee on Materials for Research of the Social Science Research Council and the American Council of Learned Societies.
Motion-picture producers and distributors.
Motion-picture theater owners.
Independent Exhibitors' League.
National Association of Broadcasters.
Music Publishers' Protective Association.
Recording companies.

At these conferences the committee sought by the method of discussion and adjustment to arrive at agreements on the various conflicts of interests and views in copyright that have plagued all attempts at revision of the copyright law for more than a decade. This phase of the work took several months. At last, in April, when an agreement appeared to have been reached in principle on nearly all points of conflict, the actual drafting of the various sections of the bill was commenced and continued through by the same method of conference.

The work of drafting has been laborious, especially because, as was to be expected, the representatives of each group of interests desired to make sure that the language used for the various sections conformed to the wishes of the group concerned.

It is sincerely believed that the proposed bill achieves by the method of democratic process, that is, conference and discussion, and not by imposition or force, an acceptable adjustment of all interests concerned in copyright, and that it attempts to satisfy the general scheme of such interests, particularly the interests of creators of literary and artistic works, those of the users of such works, those of intermediaries and labor, and those of the public.

The bill also seeks to bring the law of the United States into conformity with the International Copyright Convention, especially in view of the fact that Executive Report No. 2 of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations has recommended that the Senate advise and consent to the accession of the United States to the International Union for the Protection of Literary and Artistic Works, and that the recommendation is on the calendar of the Senate.

It is believed that the bill proposed satisfies the claims and demands of authors and other creators of literary and artistic works as fully as possible and with due consideration to the interests of users and of the public. Particular attention is drawn to the following features of the bill designed to satisfy the claims and interests of authors:

1. Copyright protection is based upon the creation of a literary or artistic work, while deposit and registration are made permissive and are also encouraged through the extension of certain rewards to authors and publishers in sections 14 and 17. This system complies with the Berne Convention in not making these formalities a condition to copyright, and at the same time places national authors on the same footing as foreign authors;

2. Exclusive rights enjoyed by authors under copyright are enumerated under section 4;

3. Moral right of authors as granted under common law is specifically retained in section 5;

4. The duration of copyright is extended for the life of the author and 50 years after his death in section 6. This conforms with the universal practice at the present time. A shorter term would place American authors at a disadvantage as compared with authors in other countries;

5. The rights of authors in their relations with employers are defined in section 8;

6. Divisibility of copyright, which has long been sought by authors, is fully provided for in section 13;

7. The author's copyright is protected in the case of bankruptcy and insolvency proceedings in section 13 (3); and

8. The author's reversionary interest in the case of grants not on the basis of continuing royalties is secured in section 13 (4).

With regard to the claims and demands of users of copyrighted works the following provisions of the bill are particularly mentioned:

1. Recordation of grants to use a copyrighted work on rights therein. The provisions of the bill in this respect are of greater advantage to users than the formalities of the act of 1909 providing for a notice of copyright and deposit and registration. In view of the great variety of uses to which a work may be put at the present time, it is not the original ownership of copyright that is really important but rather a complete record available to the public and to users of rights granted by the author, and this is provided for by the recordation of grants in section 16. It is believed that these provisions are permissible under the Berne Convention, since they are not a condition to acquisition of copyright;

2. Users of copyrighted works receiving grants of rights of the author have copyright with respect to the right granted, and, in section 21, are protected against infringement of such right, and may sue infringers without the necessity of joining the author as a party plaintiff;

3. Users are protected against importation of copies infringing their rights under the grant of the author in section 30;

4. The principle of statutory damages has been retained in section 19, the minimum being lowered, especially, in relation to multiple infringement. The principle of statutory damages as a deterrent to infringement has been supported by all groups except the National Association of Broadcasters, who oppose any minimum statutory damage for infringement by radio broadcasters;

5. Certain noninfringing uses of copyrighted works are permitted in section 12, and it will be vital that these go a long way in protecting public interest;

6. A 3-year limitation of civil and criminal actions is provided for in section 23; and

7. The indexing and publication of a monthly catalog of grants is provided for in section 37.

With regard to the rights of labor the new provisions on manufacturing and importation of sections 29, 30, and 31 are deemed to comply with the stipulations of the Berne Convention without affecting the interests of labor. Indeed, it is believed that these interests are now secured in a fuller manner as is explained in the note preceding chapter IV of the bill.

Lastly, with regard to the interests of the public, attention is drawn to the following features of the bill:

(1) The permission for the performance of musical compositions for charitable purposes;

(2) The permission for the incidental and not reasonably avoidable infringement of a copyrighted work in the depiction or representation of current news events, provided that this exemption shall not be extended to any use for advertising purposes;

(3) The making of microcopies by libraries;

(4) The making of single copies of published and unpublished works for research purposes by libraries;

(5) The protection of moral rights, already referred to, because it secures the social interest of culture; and

(6) Lastly, the transitory provision in section 46 which reserves the right of making copies for research purposes of works created prior to the coming into effect of the bill.

Several bills before Congress in the last few years have sought to extend protection of the Copyright Act to the following subject matters: Renditions, mechanical transcriptions, and designs. The committee has been unable to agree on the inclusion of these subject matters in the present bill.

With regard to renditions, the committee heard a representative of the Association of Performing Artists, and, after much discussion, it reached the conclusion that thought has not yet become crystallized on the subject, and that no way could be found at the present time for reconciling the serious conflicts of interests arising in this field. With regard to designs, while the present procedure of grant of patents in the Patent Office appears cumbersome and obsolete, it is maintained that it is not practicable to bring designs under the present bill. It is believed that we need a regulation simplifying the procedure of registering designs, as is the case in most countries of the world at the present time. In view of the fugitive character of designs, probably the creation of a special bureau for registration of designs should be provided for, while maintaining the necessity of deposit and registration and extending protection for a much shorter term than that granted to copyrighted works.

In regard to acoustic recordings, it should be explained that the Committee for the Study of Copyright and the Conference on Copyright Legislation (with the exception of representatives of record manufacturers) took the position that the "compulsory license clause" and the coin-operated machines exemption of section 1 (e) of the law of 1909 should be omitted from a new copyright bill. It is maintained that the "compulsory license" deprives authors of control of their works through contractual relations as well as being a price-fixing regulation, which has no place in a copyright bill. The exemption of coin-operated machines is held to be unfair both to the authors and to performing artists because the character of coin-operated machines has been so radically altered that the present improved machines diffuse music to the public for profit without paying for it and at the same time compete with performing artists.

The record manufacturers protest this decision.

They also ask that section 46 (a) (ii) be omitted. Concerning this request, the record manufacturers maintain that the clause as it stands is correlated with the omission of the "compulsory license" clause; they wish the benefits of the compulsory clause continued on all existing recordings.

The Committee for the Study of Copyright recognizes that record manufacturers need a regulating provision that shall enable them to control the use of their recordings so that they may not be utilized in radio broadcasting or other diffusion to the public for profit without permission and adequate remuneration. It might be possible under section 13 to add a paragraph stipulating if an author granted the right to use his work to a record manufacturer that manufacturer should have the right to print upon the record "Price—for private use; use for public diffusion for profit only on special arrangement." This regulation should also provide that the owners of work diffused should be paid for their public-performance rights and that performing artists under contract should receive a certain percentage on the public performance of the recordings of their interpretation.

The objection to this suggestion is that such regulation should not be in a copyright bill. The answer of the recording interests is that it is connected with copyright as is the manufacturing clause. In reply it is argued that the manufacturing clause should not be in the bill but it has been there so long that it is difficult to remove it. There is considerable opposition to giving copyright in recordings for they are not commonly creations of literary or artistic works but uses of them.

The problems of mechanical recordings and performers' rights are being widely studied, the latter especially by the International Labor Office. The general view is that such rights are not copyright but related to copyright and that there should be regulating provisions to safeguard these rights.

In conclusion, it should be pointed out that inasmuch as this bill is the result of long discussions, at which all interests concerned presented their views, there would hardly be any desire on the part of the various groups concerned for extended hearings. On the other hand, if the Committees on Patents of the Senate and the House wish explanations on any parts of the bill, the Committee for the Study of Copyright is in possession of copious memoranda submitted by various groups during the drafting of the bill, and would be pleased to communicate these to the congressional committees.

Very sincerely yours,

EDITH E. WARE,
Executive Secretary, Committee for the Study of Copyright.

PROPOSED JOINT COMMITTEE FOR STUDY OF BUDGET

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I submit a concurrent resolution, which I ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The concurrent resolution will be read.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 33) was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring). That there is hereby established a joint congressional committee to be composed of six members of the Senate Committee on Finance and six members of the Senate Committee on Appropriations, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and six members of the House Committee on Ways and Means and six members of the House Committee on Appropriations, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives. The committee is authorized and directed to make a full and complete study and analysis of the Budget of the United States Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and the message of the President accompanying the Budget, with a view to assisting the Congress in formulating a comprehensive fiscal program which will tend ultimately and at the earliest practicable date to bring revenues and expenditures into balance.

For the purposes of this resolution, the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the third session of the Seventy-six Congress as it deems advisable. The committee shall report to the two Houses of Congress the results of its study, together with its recommendations, not later than the sixtieth day after the establishment of the committee. Such reports shall be referred to the standing committees of the Senate and House of Representatives from which the membership of the committee established by this resolution was appointed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the concurrent resolution?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I desire to state that on Friday I supplied the able Senator from Mississippi with a copy of a resolution passed by the Republican conference which has for its purpose the expansion of the hearings to include national defense. Under the rule, of course, this concurrent resolution would have to go over for a day. I am not asking that at the present time; but I do want to know what the Senator's attitude will be with respect to the suggestion made by the Republican conference.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I do not want to delay the matter, because, under the unanimous-consent agreement, bills on the calendar are to be taken up. As I recall the suggestion made by the Republican caucus, it was that the committee should study the question of national defense and appropriations therefor, including a study of prior appropriations for the national defense, and the suggestion laid stress on investigation of the national military policy. In my opinion, if this concurrent resolution should pass the Senate and the House, the special committee certainly ought to look into the question of the national defense and the appropriations which have been made for that purpose and report, for the benefit of the Senate, its opinion as to whether adequate appropriations have been made and are now recommended for national defense. Of course, if the proposed committee are to make, at a practicable date, a report which is to be of any benefit, they could not go into a full investigation of many matters, such as all prior appropriations, but they certainly could make a cursory investigation of the matters set forth in the resolution passed by the Republican caucus.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator has expressed his views of what the joint committee should do. I want to know what they will do.

Mr. HARRISON. If I should have the privilege of being on the committee—for which membership I am not a candidate—in the event the concurrent resolution is passed, I should feel that that would be one of its primary objects, because, as the Senator appreciates, there was requested in the President's message an additional emergency appropriation of some $460,000,000 for national defense, and the question is presented whether taxes should be raised at this session for that particular purpose. Certainly, therefore, that is one of the major questions which this committee should look into and about which some conclusion should be reached and some recommendation made.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the Senator's statement is pleasing, but it is not quite satisfactory. I want something definite. I want an understanding, not as to what the proposed committee should do but as to what they would be forced to do by virtue of the adoption of the resolution.

I offer as an amendment the following, which is a portion of the resolution adopted by the Republican conference a few days ago:

That the joint congressional committee deal with national defense and appropriations therefor, including an examination of past expenditures, adequacy of results therefrom, and a survey of national military policy.

Will the Senator end this matter by incorporating that language in his concurrent resolution?

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator's resolution also suggested an additional similar joint committee to investigate the matter of national defense. Personally, I should have no objection to it, because all in the world I want is to try to arrive at a meeting of minds so that we can start a program which will ultimately and, as soon as possible, bring receipts and expenditures into balance.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator has a right to modify his resolution. Will he incorporate in it the language which I have just proposed?

Mr. HARRISON. If unanimous consent is granted—

Mr. McNARY. I want to know whether or not the Senator will do so before I grant unanimous consent for the concurrent resolution to come up.

Mr. HARRISON. So far as I am personally concerned I should be perfectly willing to do it, unless it should draw the fire of certain other gentlemen who might object to the inclusion of that language.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Mississippi yield to me?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. If the Senator does incorporate the amendment, I certainly shall object to the consideration of the concurrent resolution at this time.

Mr. McNARY. If the Senator from Mississippi does not incorporate it, I certainly shall object to its consideration at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is heard.

Mr. HARRISON. One moment. Would not the Senator be willing to let the concurrent resolution go through in its present form? The only prospective opposition I have heard about may come from certain gentlemen in the House who say it may delay appropriation bills. In my humble opinion it will not delay appropriation bills, but will not the Senator offer a separate resolution carrying out the ideas he has expressed?

Mr. McNARY. I think, as the Senator stated a moment ago, that it is very proper and prudent that the provision I have suggested should be in this resolution. I understood the Senator from Mississippi to say he was for it. I am for it. The Republican conference is for it, and I am trying now to represent that conference. I know that this proposal, by itself, would not go through. It would be said that a committee had already been appointed, and that they would touch upon this subject matter. I want it a little more completely touched upon than it probably would be by the committee. Therefore, I shall have to maintain my position at this time.

Mr. HARRISON. I will not make a request for unanimous consent to take up the concurrent resolution at this time, but I hope the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], and other Senators interested can get together with us on the passage of the concurrent resolution.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. Before the Senator yields the floor and this subject is passed by, I call attention to the interest the Committee on Military Affairs has in the concurrent resolution now presented. Already it appears that a large part of the proposal for appropriations relates to military affairs, and I merely want to ask the Senator to take into consideration the fact that somehow an inquiry, not an investigation, but an ascertainment of the facts, must be made before the Committee on Military Affairs will authorize any appropriation for additional military establishments. So that if the Senator desires to proceed at an early date with the idea contained in the concurrent resolution, I ask him to take into consideration the fact that the Committee on Military Affairs must know whether the expenditures are synchronized with the past appropriations, whether we are biting off more than we can chew, as it were, or whether the appropriations are adapted to the scheme with which the military plan can be executed. All these facts must be taken into account, as I have indicated, before the Committee on Military Affairs will consent to any more appropriations for military purposes.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I wish to say, in response to the remarks of the Senator from Vermont, that I think the members of the Committee on Military Affairs as well as the membership of the subcommittee of the Senate Appropriations Committee handling military appropriations should be invited before the special committee, which will be attempting to harmonize any differences which may exist or arise, and their views should be solicited with reference to this subject, inasmuch as it affects the legislative work of the standing committees of which they are members.

Mr. BYRNES and Mr. GLASS addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield, and if so, to whom?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield first to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BYRNES. With reference to the statement of the Senator from Vermont, I want it understood that my objection to the consideration of the concurrent resolution at this time was based solely upon the understanding that the suggestion of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] was to be incorporated.

As chairman of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations dealing with naval appropriations, about 30 days ago I gave notice that just as soon as Congress met, the subcommittee having charge of the question of naval appropriations would proceed to an inquiry into the status of existing appropriations, and the purposes for which funds were heretofore authorized, and would make a recommendation as to whether or not, in the light of the developments during the present war abroad, there should be any diversion of the funds to some purpose other than the purpose appropriated for 12 months ago; that for the purpose of the prosecution of that inquiry, the most comprehensive investigation should be made.

Pursuant to that determination, on the first day of the session I gave notice that such an investigation would be made, and have conferred with officials of the Navy Department in order to have the Department send before the Committee on Appropriations the individuals having charge of the expenditure of the funds appropriated for this fiscal year. The date at which we would start the investigation I have not indicated, because I have been unable to get in touch with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, who, by reason of his position as chairman of the legislative committee, is a member of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations having charge of naval appropriations.

In view of these circumstances, before any action was taken by the Senate providing for an investigation of this subject by the suggested committee of 24, I desired to have the Senate acquainted with what the Committee on Appropriations intends to do, and to do immediately, because it is my view that the inquiry should be made at this time in order that the Senate may have the information when it comes to the consideration of the deficiency bill which will be in the Senate within 10 days. If the information is to be of value in the consideration of the expenditure of quite a large sum appropriated, or estimated for, in the deficiency bill, some inquiry ought to be made at this time. I would not want the inquiry delayed, and I believe, too, that it should be made by the committee which made these appropriations, which knows the purposes which were authorized, and, by reason of experience with the subject, can with greater facility make the inquiry.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Mississippi yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. GLASS. I hope that when the concurrent resolution is taken up someone will be prepared to tell us why the Appropriations Committees of the two Houses are to be superseded in their natural work. Every question of appropriations is determined first by one of the subcommittees and then by the full Committee on Appropriations. We do not need any general committee of 24. We have 24 members on the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, and we are detached from any particular view. We consider matters on their merits, not because the Committee on Naval Affairs or the Committee on Military Affairs wants them considered. I think the matter had better be left to the Committees on Appropriations of the two Houses.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Mississippi yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I desire to ask what it is the special committee proposed to be created can do that the regular committees of the House and the Senate are not now authorized or prepared to do. I do not understand why it is necessary to have a special committee if it is to have no additional powers. For instance, the Committee on Finance of the Senate has under its control the entire subject covered by the concurrent resolution presented by the Senator from Mississippi; it has the same authority with reference to investigating these matters and considering them and discussing them as the special committee would have, according to the concurrent resolution which has been presented. And so with reference to the expenditures for national defense. The question with me is, if the concurrent resolutions are to be agreed to, as indicated here, in the terms in which they are presented, what additional authority will be given which the committees of the Senate do not now have?

Mr. HARRISON. Of course, when I presented the concurrent resolution, I expected to make some preliminary remarks. I hope the Senate will grant me unanimous consent to proceed for 30 minutes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Senator from Mississippi has 30 minutes.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, while the proposal I have made might devolve more labor upon my shoulders, assuming that I should be appointed on the special committee, and upon the others who might be selected to conduct the proposed study, in my opinion we are at a point where we must promptly begin a fiscal program which will result in a balance between Government expenditures and receipts. The message the President has just submitted to us is one of the most important Budget messages that has come to Congress, resulting in our being confronted with a great many difficult problems to solve.

We all know the condition of the Federal Treasury. We know how Government expenditures have increased during the last 10 or 12 years. We know that the national debt has been increased from some $19,000,000,000 in 1932 to the point where it is estimated that on June 30, 1941, it will reach almost $45,000,000,000, the limit fixed by law; and we know, as legislators who are confronted with this problem, that with an $8,400,000,000 expenditure program recommended, with large reductions in certain items, and with a substantial increase in another item, that of national defense, a recommendation is made to us about enacting taxes at this time to finance the emergency national defense expenditures—all of which presents questions not solely within the jurisdiction of the Committees on Appropriations of the House and the Senate. It presents problems coming within the jurisdiction of other committees.

Of course, the Finance Committee—which in the end must deal with the recommended tax increases or the possibility of an increase in the national debt limitation—can remain quiescent while the total recommended appropriations in the Budget are increased by various groups that might be formed without any effort being made to cooperate in carrying forward a real retrenchment program. I believe sincerely that this proposal is a step in the right direction. We are handed by the President in this message a real effort upon his part toward retrenchment. We should consider it on a broad front of wholehearted cooperation and understanding of what is being done by the committees having to do with expenditures as well as providing the necessary funds. What I suggest in this proposal is that before entering this game, we players agree on a set of signals so that there will be good team work. We want to score a touchdown and see at the earliest practicable date the elimination of Government deficits and a balance of Government revenues and expenditures. There are many States in the Union in which both bodies of the legislature create a committee having jurisdiction over appropriations and at the same time of raising the ways and means for meeting the expenditures. I know that the Senate in my own State of Mississippi has that power and has jurisdiction over both appropriations and taxes.

I have no desire to tread on the toes of the Committee on Appropriations or of any other committee of this body or of the House, but we can invite members of the other committees which might be affected to participate, and, if we act as sensible representatives, we can pull together.

So far as the Committee on Finance, of which I have the honor to be chairman, is concerned, I shall bring to the attention of the full committee every subject that is taken up, and a report of the discussions which take place. The proposed special committee would not have any final jurisdiction. It can only report the results of its study and its recommendations, under the terms of the resolution. It may accomplish nothing, so far as that is concerned. There may be minority reports, there may be three or four different reports; but this is a step in the right direction, a step toward the adoption of a fiscal program which I hope and believe will lead us eventually, and at as early a date as possible, to a real balanced Budget in this country.

Mr. President, I think the President's message was an admirable one. As an individual I may differ with him in respect to certain reductions proposed in his message. But I think we can look at the problem in a broad way and make up our minds that the expenditures of the Government should not exceed a certain amount. The Finance Committee and the Ways and Means Committee, as well as the Appropriations Committees of the two Houses, can get the views of the proposed special committee, and through cooperation we can work out some satisfactory program.

Mr. President, it may be that a difference of opinion exists as to whether or not taxes should be laid for simply one fiscal year, or whether they should be levied for a period of 2 or 3 years in order to spread them out and thus lighten the burden of taxation, or at least not greatly increase the burden placed on the people of the country who have money for investment which might result in giving employment to more people and reduce our large relief appropriations.

Mr. President, there are many angles to the question. The proposal contained in the President's message of reducing by $700,000,000 the capital funds of certain Government agencies and corporations and crediting the revolving funds in the Treasury with funds received from the retirement of stock in the case of some of the Government lending agencies, are matters which ought to be studied carefully and will be looked into by the proper committees of Congress, I have no doubt.

But, Mr. President, I ask: What harm is there in providing a special committee which might bring about a meeting of minds, and might result in a determined and cooperative effort on the part of all Members of Congress?

Mr. President, I have no pride of opinion with respect to the proposal I have offered. I believe it is a wise one. I think it is constructive, I think it is sound, and I believe the country also has the same thought about it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Is it contemplated that the resolution, if it shall be agreed to, may serve to postpone or delay the usual hearings and regular consideration and final action on the various appropriation bills?

Mr. HARRISON. It certainly is not, Mr. President. The resolution provides that action on the part of the proposed special committee shall not be delayed longer than 60 days.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; but 60 days would result in an unusual delay.

Mr. HARRISON. The committee can make its report, if it comes to a conclusion, within 20 days or 30 days, or any time under 60 days. It is not the intention of anyone to hold up any appropriation bills. If the House Appropriations Committee wishes to go ahead, very well, let it go ahead. If I were a Member of the House Appropriations Committee, and such a proposal as this were made to me, I would say that 10 or 15 days' delay in the passage of this appropriation measure or some other appropriation measure would not be destructive, because the Congress must pass the general appropriation bills for the next fiscal year during the present session. Of course, the deficiency appropriation bill is in a somewhat different situation. Notice of this proposal was given as soon as the Budget message and the President's views were submitted to Congress. This is only the beginning of the session. Certainly, if committees have already acted on certain appropriation bills, all of them have not as yet been finished or are ready to be reported. I do not believe that my proposal will seriously interfere with the work of any committee. My desire is to seek cooperation in attaining the common goal of a sound fiscal program.

Mr. President, the point I wish to make is this: I have no desire in the world to do anything other than try to arrive at a meeting of minds and the accomplishment of a desirable end. I do not wish to cause delay. I wish to see the labors of the present Congress concluded as quickly as possible, so we may get away as early as we can. I am as anxious to have that accomplished as anyone in the Senate. I am ready to go just as far as the Senate is in the matter of amendments which may be proposed to the concurrent resolution. I do not entertain the feeling that all the wisdom was lodged in those who drew up the resolution. However, I do not wish to find myself in the situation where some Senator will object to consideration of the resolution because time is of the essence of this question. I think the committee ought to go to work very quickly if the proposed action is to be taken and accomplished. We can accomplish nothing if the committee must wait until legislation has been enacted.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. Does the resolution confine the proposed study merely to the financial problems of Government departments?

Mr. HARRISON. It is proposed to make a study of the whole fiscal policy involved in the recently submitted Budget, as well as the President's message of transmittal.

Mr. WALSH. The press has indicated—I do not find anything in the resolution to that effect, however—that the resolution would propose an investigation or study of the matter of national defense. Is that contemplated by the resolution?

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, since the President's message calls for an extraordinary expenditure, an emergency expenditure, of some $460,000,000, and specifically asks for increased taxes to cover that expenditure, which is for emergency national defense, I think certainly it is pertinent that the proposed committee, if it shall be appointed, should study that question. Necessarily, in studying it, the able and distinguished chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee would be one of the first to be consulted.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I appreciate that, but I think I should take at least occasion to say, if the Senator will permit me, that, as I view it, in the absence of further information from the Navy Department, the problem of national defense from the standpoint of the Navy is largely a matter how large the appropriations for the Navy should be made at this session.

The Congress 2 years ago, in 1938, authorized for the expansion of the Navy an expenditure of about $1,250,000,000. It was to be a 10-year program, with the expectation that about $120,000,000 would be spent each year in new construction.

A situation may now exist which requires the speeding up of what was supposed to be a 10-year program. It may be necessary to make that program only a 5-year program, but the authorization is there, and it seems to me that the real issue, so far as the Navy is concerned, is one of how much money we want to expend this year out of what has been authorized for new construction.

Personally, so far as I am now informed, I do not see any occasion for much further authorization of funds for naval defense. However, I have not had an opportunity to confer with the naval authorities or with the President in reference to new undertakings other than those that are already authorized.

I had assumed that the naval problem was largely one of how much beyond that determined during the past should be appropriated each year to speed up our Navy program. I have no objection, I will say, to the Senator's general suggestion or request for a financial study or survey by either a special committee or by the Finance Committee or some other committee. I think that is desirable, and it is important that every step that may lead to a real effort to balance the Budget be undertaken. But I do think there has been some misunderstanding, so far as the Navy is concerned, as to the matter of additional appropriation for national defense. We must keep in mind the distinction between authorizations and appropriations. I understand that under present laws authority exists to appropriate nearly $1,000,000,000 for new ships and aircraft.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, of course, the Senator's statement would be very impressive, I am sure, on the minds of the members of the committee, and certainly the committee would welcome the views of the Secretary of the Navy and the distinguished Senator in charge of naval appropriations, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES]. The committee would certainly want to go into all matters relating to national defense, both military and naval, because the Finance Committee, in my opinion, does not want to have to increase taxes for that purpose unless it is absolutely necessary.

But, Senators, beware of this: If we shall continue spending, it means increased taxes, or an increase in the present limitation on the national debt. I wish that by a meeting of minds and by collaboration and cooperation we could reduce these appropriations in such a way as would appeal to Congress to the point where we could avoid any increased taxes or any increase in the national debt. That is all I desire to see accomplished.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I do not want to delay the business of the Senate, but inasmuch as this matter is under discussion, I wish to make a very brief observation or two. In the first place, I think it probably would be worth serious consideration on the part of the Congress whether there should be established for the future some sort of coordinating joint committee to consider revenues and expenditures.

The Senate may recall that last June I suggested here on the floor the creation of a joint committee to study the whole tax problem, because at that time it was contemplated that the Congress might be called on at an early date to revise the entire tax structure with a view to making it more systematic, and not have it remain as it has been for many years, a sort of patchwork of taxes levied to meet particular emergencies as the emergencies have arisen. That suggestion came to nothing. I did not at that time contemplate the additional suggestion contained in the resolution of the Senator from Mississippi for consideration of the Budget, because at that time the Budget had not been submitted.

As a permanent policy and for the long future, I think it would be well for the Congress to seek a way to create a joint coordinating committee between the two Houses to work out problems of taxation and expenditures. Whether that can be done wisely in the middle of a session to apply to the particular situation that exists at such a time may be open to question.

I have no objection to the resolution offered by the Senator from Mississippi, and I shall support it, but I do not find myself able to support the suggestion offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY]. The resolution proposes to create a joint committee to investigate the Budget. The Budget contains not only recommendations for national defense, but it contains recommendations with respect to all the other appropriations for all the other departments of the Government, and it suggests, of course, the propriety of raising supplemental taxes to meet the expenditures for national defense. I see no more reason for singling out in this general resolution the question of military policy and adequacy of defense, or the expenditures for defense made by appropriations heretofore enacted, than any other activity of the Government, such as the Public Works Administration, the Civilian Conservation Corps, the W. P. A., or the Agricultural Department. I see no reason for emphasizing an investigation into the national defense, which might throw some cloud upon whether or not we are properly or adequately defended, and leaving all the other activities of the Government unmentioned. I think the concurrent resolution is broad enough to authorize the committee to investigate the national defense; and I am sure it would do so if it were appointed, because it would be ridiculous to have it investigate the President's Budget and the question of revenues and expenditures with respect to every other department and leave the question of national defense untouched. So there is no doubt that the committee would have the authority to investigate the national defense. I do not see how the Senator from Oregon or any other Senator could seek to require the Senator from Mississippi or any other Senator to bind the committee in advance. The committee is proposed to be made up half of Senators and half of Members of the other House. The committee, of course, would determine its own course. I assume that if it were appointed it could carry out in good faith the instructions in the concurrent resolution, which would include the very thing suggested by the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. When the Senator voices objection to going into the matter of national defense on the ground that it would appear to throw some doubt upon the adequacy of our national defense or the need for additional taxes for national defense, does not the Senator recognize that the President himself did just that in his message? He specifically pointed out the need for additional funds for national defense, and specifically pointed out the method and means for raising taxes to pay for it.

Mr. BARKLEY. He did not specifically point out the method and means for raising taxes. He suggested that the taxes be raised.

The point I make is that there is no more reason in the concurrent resolution to call attention specifically to one item of expenditure and have it investigated and named, than to have other items of expenditure in the Government investigated.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. During the second session of the present Congress, when the neutrality bill was under consideration, I remember making the statement that in the past 6 years we have appropriated an average of more than $1,000,000,000 annually for the Army and Navy for national defense. If $1,000,000,000 has been spent annually for the past 6 years, it would seem to some of us that we ought now to have an adequate defense and that it ought not to be necessary to have a larger appropriation for the coming year.

Mr. BARKLEY. For the sake of argument, admitting the correctness of the Senator's attitude, the point is, Why mention a particular item in a general resolution authorizing the creation of a joint committee to consider the entire subject—the whole question of taxation, revenues, and appropriations?

I was interested in the suggestion offered by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] a while ago, that the Military Affairs Committee would not authorize any additional expenditures for national defense until it had gone thoroughly into the matter and had ascertained to its satisfaction the need for further authorization. Of course, that attitude would be expected of the committee. No matter what happens with respect to the proposed joint committee, it is not my understanding that it is to relieve the individual standing committees of the Senate or House of their responsibility. Regardless of any recommendation made by the joint committee, or any finding of fact, in my judgment, the Committees on Military Affairs and on Naval Affairs, as well as the Appropriations Committees of the two Houses, would go into these matters thoroughly to satisfy themselves that additional authorizations were needed or that appropriations were needed.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. My observation was made solely for the purpose of avoiding, if possible, duplication of work—that is, having two committees doing the same thing—my idea being that either the special committee, if one is to be created out of two other committees than the Military Affairs Committee, should leave the subject alone or else the committee itself should be formed in such a way that some members of the Military Affairs Committee would be on the committee, and not merely go before the committee to testify. I think the committee ought to contain members of the standing committees which are especially interested in the inquiry or else it ought to leave the subject alone for the other committees to handle.

Mr. BARKLEY. That raises the question whether the joint committee, if created, should be larger than 24, or whether the representation should be changed so as to include members of the Military Affairs Committees and the Naval Affairs Committees of the 2 Houses. I, myself, do not see how any joint committee larger than 24 could function very efficiently. I think that number is sufficiently large. The question of its composition is a matter for the 2 Houses to determine. However, the point I wish to make is that I do not see any reason, in a general resolution, for singling out the national defense for a special investigation any more than any other particular expenditure or department of the Government, some of which involve a larger amount than is asked for by the President for national defense.

Just one other observation—

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let me suggest to the Senator the reason why I think heavy and special emphasis should be put at this particular point, as demanded by the able Senator from Oregon. Perhaps the investigation contemplated by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] would serve the purpose we have in mind. I should be pretty well satisfied with any investigation conducted by the able Senator from South Carolina. However, I think that after we have spent billions and billions and billions of dollars upon national defense, with the unanimous, earnest desire that we shall have a complete and adequate national defense, and with the serial assurance each year that we were meeting every necessity, it is highly discouraging to discover that apparently the national defense is often inadequate in many of its key factors, as we are now frequently told. I think it is time we discovered whether or not we are getting our money's worth out of prior and present appropriations before we proceed further into the field of large additional expenditures.

Since that is the one budgetary point with respect to which, under the President's own program, he himself is exceeding the figures of last year's appropriation, I submit that he has himself put an emphasis upon defense which we cannot evade, and that we in turn are entitled to put the same emphasis upon defense when we try to find out what new burdens shall be placed upon the groaning taxpayers of the country.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will say to the Senator from Michigan that no one objects to ascertaining all the facts which are essential and which are available in regard to our national-defense situation. Certainly I would not for a moment advocate the continuation of an appropriation for any item of national defense unless it were needed and unless it were kept within reasonable bounds, admitting, of course, that in public expenditure we cannot always expect to get a dollar's worth for every dollar we spend. I would not be in favor of spending additional sums unless they were necessary, and I should like to know if there has been any lack of efficiency in the expenditure of the moneys we have already appropriated for national defense. I am wondering whether or not a joint committee of 24, charged with the duty of investigating and reporting within 60 days all the expenditures of all the departments of government could devote sufficient special attention to national defense to ascertain the information which the two legislative committees and the Appropriations Committee can ascertain in the discharge of their duty as standing committees of the House and Senate.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. If the Senator will permit one further observation, I think there is much to be said for the point the Senator now submits. The general fiscal subject certainly is so large that 60 days devoted to it by one committee could monopolize that committee's attention without any detours. It is for that reason that it was my original purpose and hope that the joint congressional formula proposed by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], which I cordially endorse, could be also used in the national-defense field, and that we might have another similar joint committee representing the Military and Naval Affairs Committees of the House and Senate to canvass the whole question in respect to national defense; the whole question as to whether or not we are getting our money's worth out of defense appropriations; the whole question as to whether the defense scheme ought to be changed in the light of latest war experience; and the whole question as to whether or not we need to go to any substantial additional investment in this field if defense, and defense alone, is our objective.

It seems to me that if we could have a joint congressional decision in respect to these fundamental questions, which the people of the United States themselves are asking every day of the year, it would greatly facilitate the work of the Senate and the House, and of the Congress itself, in respect to the ultimate appropriations. I want this country adequately defended and I shall continue to vote all essential appropriations to this end. But I decline to ignore the basic fact that the preservation of a sound public credit is the first of all national-defense necessities, and that a realistic check upon all governmental expenditures is essential to this achievement.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I realize the force of the Senator's suggestion. However, in view of the high character of the Committee on Military Affairs, the Committee on Naval Affairs, and the Appropriations Committee, and the ability of the Appropriations Committee to follow along and make appropriations for expenditures which have been previously authorized under the leadership of the legislative committees, I am not willing to admit that the standing committees are either incompetent or unwilling, charged as they are with a specific duty, to ascertain all the facts connected with their particular portion of national defense, to such an extent that we must have an over-all investigating committee on national defense alone in order to supplement the information obtained by the standing committees.

If a separate resolution is offered to create an investigating committee on national defense to supersede in some way the standing committees, we can reach the question when it arises; but I do not think any such amendment ought to be put in the proposed concurrent resolution if it is to be adopted by the Senate.

One other observation, Mr. President. The President submitted his Budget to the Senate and House, and with it he sent a very clarifying message. The reductions which have been made by the President in the Budget are commendable. Whether they could be greater or whether they are too great in some items, Members will have their own individual opinion; but I think it should be stated that unless we keep within the Budget recommendations of the President we shall be confronted with the question either of new taxes or of raising the debt limit above $45,000,000,000. If we have to meet that situation, Senators and Members of the House of Representatives will probably have to make a choice between the enactment of some sort of new taxes and the increase of the debt limit if we go beyond the Budget recommendations.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. Does not the Senator recognize a third possibility of reducing expenditures still further?

Mr. BARKLEY. Oh, yes; I recognize that possibility, but I have looked in vain in the statement given out by the Senator the other day to find where we could reduce them to the extent he suggests. I am sympathetic with the general idea that if we can reduce expenditures it ought to be done; but what I am trying to impress upon Congress, if I can, is the responsibility of Congress itself trying to keep appropriations within the Budget recommendations, because we cannot go very much above them without either levying additional taxes or increasing the debt limit, and, psychologically, one would be about as unpleasant as the other.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The problem is even more challenging than the Senator has indicated, because we cannot escape the debt limit, even under the President's Budget, unless his highly optimistic increase in revenues occurs and unless we restore to the Treasury certain capital funds from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. BARKLEY. The difference between the amount carried in the Budget and the amount necessary to be appropriated in order to exceed the $45,000,000,000 debt limit is so precarious that we have got to walk a tightrope with all the umbrellas we can carry for balancing purposes in order not to go above the $45,000,000,000 debt limit in our appropriations and not to require some new form of revenue. That is all I have to say at this time.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to speak for 5 minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none and the Senator from South Carolina will proceed.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I stated before that I have no objection to the resolution of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] as submitted by him. I am in hearty accord with the objective because that objective, as I understand it, is set forth in the last three lines of the first paragraph, which suggest an effort "to bring revenues and expenditures into balance."

However, I think we should understand the situation. It has heretofore been proposed that the Congress create a joint committee to be known as the Budget Committee, which committee prior to the convening of the Congress, would meet and determine upon the amount of the Budget. The difficulty that then confronted the Congress was that Members wanted to know how the committee would arrive at the total which was supposed to govern them, and, if the committee was to be nothing but a mere conference, that it should be provided that the Budget as thus agreed upon by the committee should be submitted to the Congress, determined by it, and adopted as to the total amount to be spent by the Congress. That, of course, meant that the Congress would get somewhere, if as a whole it should fix the total amount of the Budget, then apportion the total amount among the various departments, and the Appropriations Committees should then be charged with the duty, after hearings, of determining how the amount for each department would be allotted. That question, however, is not involved in the pending resolution which the Senator from Mississippi says is merely advisory. I said I would have no objection to it because of his statement that he does not contemplate that the appropriation bills will be held up. To my mind, that would not be practicable.

We should realize that Members of the other House left their homes in November and came to Washington to start hearings upon appropriation bills. Long ago the House found that no large committee of 32 members or 24 members could possibly conduct the hearings upon all the appropriation bills. So that the Appropriations Committee of the House is divided up into subcommittees of five members who live with the respective bills which they have in charge all during the year; they devote constant thought to the bills, and in November start hearings on them. Today hearings on the deficiency or supplemental appropriation bill, have been completed, and within a few days that bill will be reported. The hearings have been completed on the independent offices bill, the bill has been marked up, and, it is intended next week to bring that measure before the House for consideration, and then have it come to the Senate. Their program is that each week thereafter an appropriation bill shall be reported to the House. Three such bills are now ready to be reported and others will follow.

It is a practical question. Those men do not take merely a chance view or make a mere survey from a casual statement of the head of a department, but they conduct hearings, just as a court takes testimony, from 10 o'clock in the morning until 5 o'clock in the afternoon. I spent 10 years on that committee, and I know their procedure. For either the naval appropriation bill or the Army appropriation bill or the agricultural appropriation bill the printed testimony will amount to six or seven hundred pages and sometimes to a thousand pages. The subcommittees go into every item, and there is a vigorous minority there challenging the statements made by department heads.

I know, as a factual matter, that if we provide a committee of 24 men to act on all appropriation bills, and they are denied an opportunity of spending a month, say, on a given bill, as would be necessary if they should give the same careful consideration to it which the subcommittee of the House Appropriations Committee gives to it, and which the subcommittee of the Senate Appropriations Committee gives to it, they could consider one of the appropriation bills, either the Army or the Navy or the agricultural bill; but if 24 men attempt to conduct real hearings to determine whether or not a given department should receive from the Congress the amount estimated by the department, and 24 men should ask questions instead of 5 men asking questions, I do not believe that they could finish one bill in the time that 5 Members of the House and five Members of the Senate could finish it. The Appropriations Committee was divided into subcommittees, because it was found impossible with a large committee to make the detailed investigation that should be made in order to determine how much should be appropriated in the case of the respective appropriation bills. The Senator from Mississippi, however, says he does not expect that the proposed committee would go into that in the detailed way in which the Appropriations Committees proceed.

Now, when the independent offices bill comes to the Senate a week from now, the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], who is chairman of the Appropriations Committee, must start hearings. I happen to be a member of the subcommittee on that bill. For 10 days certainly we must meet at 10 o'clock in the morning and remain in session all day—except for the time when we have to come to the floor of the Senate to answer roll calls—to examine and consider that bill and hold hearings on it; and the other Members are in the same situation. If six members of the Appropriations Committee are to serve on the proposed joint committee to conduct another investigation, I must say that it will be very difficult for them to proceed with the hearings in the Appropriations Committee itself. If 10 days or 2 weeks or a month or the 60 days provided in the resolution should pass, no great harm, I agree, would be done, because the Congress has not got to adjourn in June or at any particular time. If necessary, it could go ahead, but a 24-member committee, in my opinion, would find it difficult to make any detailed investigation of every appropriation bill; and if it should not do so, it would not absolve the subcommittee in charge of the agricultural appropriation bill or the deficiency bill or the naval bill from the duty of going over every item in those bills. That is what they should do.

I do not see why there should be any objection to the resolution, for I do not believe any subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee will object to getting all the advice that it can get about the amount which should be provided in any appropriation bill. I am frank to say that the only objection I see would be the possibility of delaying the appropriation bills. I can imagine, from the experience that the Congress generally has, that if they were held up, as the information was obtained by officials of the executive departments that some reduction in appropriations was to be made and gentlemen in Denver, Atlanta, San Francisco, and Chicago who are interested in securing increases in the appropriations were advised of that fact, they would have about 30 days instead of 10 days within which to set in motion efforts to prevent the reduction. That would make it very difficult to reduce appropriations.

Everyone in this Nation is in favor of economy, provided the Congress does not reduce the appropriations for the items in which he is interested, but whenever we undertake to touch his pet item, a reduction is vigorously resisted. I received a letter from a chamber of commerce in my own city this morning. Up to this time I have received from them about once a month suggestions favoring the balancing of the Budget, but the suggestion now is against reducing the appropriation for the C. C. C. and appropriations for the Agriculture Department as recommended in the Budget submitted by the President. From this day on such mail will increase. The way to accomplish the object the Senator from Mississippi has—and there is no Member of the body who has been more consistent in advocating it—is for the Senate of the United States to determine that they are not going to vote for appropriations in excess of the total amount asked for by the President.

No one is going to ask the Congress to surrender to the President the right to say that a cut shall be made in this item and not in another item, because the Congress has its own views about such matters, but when it comes to the total, the question is whether we are going to stay within it or whether we are going to levy taxes, as the Senator from Mississippi says, or increase the debt limit. My only reason for saying anything at this time is that I want it understood that, if the resolution is adopted, the Appropriations Committee will nevertheless go ahead with its detailed investigation of the bills before it and endeavor, so far as possible, I hope, to keep the appropriations within the Budget.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I ask for the regular order.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, if an objection is to be made to unanimous consent for the consideration of this resolution, will the Senator permit that to be done?

Mr. McNARY. I objected a short time ago.

Mr. HARRISON. I have not requested unanimous consent.

Mr. McNARY. In view of the Senator's attitude, I objected a little while ago, and I persist in my objection. I ask for the regular order.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator says, "in view of the Senator's attitude." Does he mean my attitude?

Mr. McNARY. I offered a proposal which was the product of the Republican conference, and the Senator did not see fit to incorporate it in his resolution. Therefore, I objected to immediate consideration of the resolution, and I still maintain that position. I ask for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon objects to present consideration of the concurrent resolution.

NAVAL BUDGET

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, before asking for the regular order, will the Senator yield in order that I may insert in the RECORD some information in connection with the concurrent resolution?

Mr. McNARY. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. I have prepared a digest of the Budget estimates for the Navy, setting forth the regular appropriations for 1940, the requested regular appropriations for 1941, and the emergency appropriations requested for the 1940 and 1941 fiscal years, with a statement of the various purposes for which the appropriations are asked. The statement is very brief, and summarizes the whole story of the naval appropriations recommended by the Bureau of the Budget. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD in connection with this discussion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement is as follows:

Naval budget (regular)

THE CALENDAR

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is called for. If there be no further concurrent or other resolutions, the morning business is concluded. Under the special order heretofore entered, the calendar will now be called for the consideration of unobjected-to bills.

The first business on the calendar was the resolution (S. Res. 58) providing that a calendar day's notice shall suffice in connection with suspension of a rule.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the resolution go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 74) providing for a Committee on Civil Aviation was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the resolution go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 45) to amend the act of July 3, 1926, entitled "An act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, examine, adjudicate, and render judgment in claims which the Crow Tribe of Indians may have against the United States, and for other purposes," was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the joint resolution go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 783) to amend the act, as amended, entitled "An act to refer the claims of the Delaware Indians to the Court of Claims, with the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States," approved February 7, 1925, was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 790) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claims of the Prairie Band or Tribe of Pottawatomie Indians of Kansas and Wisconsin against the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1222) authorizing an appropriation for payment to the Osage Tribe of Indians on account of lands sold by the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 767) conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear, examine, adjudicate, and enter judgment in any claims which the Assiniboine Indians may have against the United States, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, at the last session of Congress a number of so-called Indian bills were reported. They are on the calendar. Objection was made to their consideration. In the meantime the Department of the Interior, which has to do with the claims of Indians against the Government, has made a study of the various bills which are pending, as well as other claims that are now before the Court of Claims; and within the next week or 10 days the Department of Justice will make a submission to a special committee which has been appointed. In the meantime I ask that these Indian bills go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. At the request of the Senator from Utah, Senate bill 767, Senate bill 864, and Senate bill 498 will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1162) to provide for the recognition of the services of the civilian officials and employees, citizens of the United States, engaged in and about the construction of the Panama Canal, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1303) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, with respect to cotton, was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 795) to provide for the education of all types of physically handicapped children, to make an appropriation of money therefor, and to regulate its expenditure, was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1681) to amend section 107 of the Judicial Code to create a mountain district in the State of Tennessee, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 570) to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in agricultural products; to prevent unfair competition; to provide for the orderly marketing of such products; to promote the general welfare by assuring an abundant and permanent supply of such products by securing to the producers a minimum price of not less than cost of production, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 107) opposing sales of American cotton during the present world crisis to foreign purchasers below the cost of production was announced as next in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think that resolution had better go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1305) to promote the general welfare through appropriation of funds to assist the States and Territories in providing more effective programs of public education was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1265) to establish a Department of Public Works, to amend certain sections of the Social Security Act, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG and Mr. BARKLEY. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2202) to establish a Public Works Agency was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2203) to amend certain sections of the Social Security Act was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 34) for the relief of W. K. Richardson was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the joint resolution go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 517) to amend the Communications Act of 1934 to prohibit the advertising of alcoholic beverages by radio was announced as next in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1730) to amend the civil-service law to permit certain employees of the legislative branch of the Government to be transferred to positions under the competitive classified civil service was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 289) for the relief of officers and soldiers of the Volunteer Service of the United States mustered into service for the War with Spain was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1650) to promote peace and the national defense through a more equal distribution of the burdens of war by drafting the use of money according to ability to lend to the Government was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

SETTLEMENT OF DISPUTES WITH THE UNITED STATES

The bill (S. 915) to provide for the more expeditious settlement of disputes with the United States, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. KING subsequently said: Mr. President, I am compelled to leave the Chamber to attend a meeting of the Monopoly Committee. When Senate bill 915, known as the Logan bill, was called earlier in the day, objection was made to its consideration. I have just spoken to the majority leader and advised him of the fact that at an early date I shall ask the Senate to take this bill from the calendar and consider it, and, I hope, pass it. I give that notice now so that Senators may be advised of the pendency of the measure and the purpose to call it up for consideration at an early date.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. There are certain amendments that will be proposed to this measure whenever it shall be under consideration. The amendments are not as yet prepared. I have been collaborating with the Department of Justice with respect to the matter, and I shall be glad to confer with the Senator regarding it at some convenient time. I do not want the bill taken up until the amendments shall be ready to be offered.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I may say to my leader that the same suggestion was made repeatedly to the late Senator Logan, but the amendments were not tendered. Months have gone by; hearings were conducted by the Judiciary Committee; the subcommittee, including the able Senator from Nebraska, favorably reported the bill to the full committee, and the full committee unanimously reported it to the Senate. Ample opportunity was given by the late Senator Logan and other members of the committee to any person or persons to offer amendments.

I suggest to my friend from Kentucky, if any amendments are to be offered, that he bring them to the attention of the subcommittee at as early a date as possible, so that we may take them into consideration, and if we feel that they are proper, undoubtedly they will be accepted by the committee. I should like to state further to the Senator that I do not think he ought to delay this measure upon the ground that amendments are to be or may be prepared by the Department of Justice and offered to the bill. The same claim was made heretofore, as Senator Logan told me, by officials of the Department.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not relying altogether on the suggestions of the Department of Justice. There are certain provisions of the bill which I think ought to be very carefully considered. The Senator knows what happened to the measure at the last session, or the session before the last. It is the kind of bill that ought not to be passed on the call of the Consent Calendar, because it involves all the departments of the Government; and there is a question whether the bill will operate as a strait jacket to an extent that would be unwise. That entire subject will be gone into when the bill comes up.

I am not seeking to delay the measure. It is an important one, and certainly when it is considered it ought to be considered on its merits and a full disclosure made of the effect its passage will have upon the agencies of the Government.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I merely wish to give notice that I shall try to have the bill considered at an early date; and I hope the majority leader will cooperate with me and other members of the committee in that effort.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 457) to amend the World War Adjusted Compensation Act was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over. The Senator who introduced the bill is not here to explain it.

The bill (S. 1852) to promote the free flow of domestically produced fishery products in commerce, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1740) to promote business and economic research in the United States by establishing and maintaining in connection with State university schools of business administration, research stations to cooperate with the Department of Commerce, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WHITE. Let the bill go over.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, as the author of Senate bill 1740, I give notice that at the first opportunity I shall move to have a time set for taking up the bill when it can be properly considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 6264) authorizing the construction upon and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2110) to provide for purchase of fish (including shellfish) and products thereof by the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2259) to amend laws for preventing collisions of vessels, to regulate equipment of certain motorboats on the navigable waters of the United States, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 145) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relating to old-age assistance was announced as next in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. Let the joint resolution go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1296) to amend paragraphs (b), (c), and (d) of section 6 of the District of Columbia Traffic Act, 1925, as amended by the acts of July 3, 1926, and February 27, 1931, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2264) for the relief of Frank P. Hoyt was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2585) to reimburse the cotton cooperative associations for losses occasioned by the Federal Farm Board's stabilization operations, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 84) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States for a referendum on war was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG and Mr. BARKLEY. Let the joint resolution go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 140) proposing an amendment to the Constitution relating to the power of the Congress to declare war was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG and Mr. KING. Let the joint resolution go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2687) to establish a circuit court of appeals for patents was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 409) to protect American labor and stimulate the employment of American citizens on American jobs was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The President pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. REYNOLDS subsequently said: Mr. President, at the time the clerk called Senate bill 409 I was looking at another number on the calendar. What was the comment upon that bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was objected to.

The bill (H. R. 5643) to invest the circuit courts of appeals of the United States with original and exclusive jurisdiction to review the order of detention of any alien ordered deported from the United States whose deportation or departure from the United States otherwise is not effectuated within 90 days after the date the warrant of deportation shall have become final; to authorize such detention orders in certain cases; to provide places for such detention; and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2573) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended; for the purpose of regulating interstate and foreign commerce in rice and providing for the orderly marketing of rice at fair prices in interstate and foreign commerce, was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG and Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2289) for the relief of the Leesburg Welding & Garage Co. was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 6039) to amend laws for preventing collisions of vessels; to regulate equipment of certain motorboats on navigable waters of the United States, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 101) defining and classifying gratuity expenditures allowable as offsets in favor of the United States and against the Five Civilized Nations or Tribes of Indians, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I think this joint resolution would come within the category of the Indian cases to which I have referred, and that it should be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2420) relating to certain inspections and investigation in coal mines for the purpose of obtaining information relating to health and safety conditions, accidents, and occupational diseases therein, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 153) to approve the action of the Secretary of the Interior in defining the collection of certain irrigation charges against lands under the Blackfeet Indian irrigation project, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, has that joint resolution been favorably reported?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has been favorably reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs, without amendment.

Mr. KING. Let it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1970) to eliminate certain oppressive labor practices affecting interstate and foreign commerce, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. TAFT. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 2953) authorizing States owning lands or interest therein acquired from the United States to include the same in certain agreements for the conservation of oil and gas resources was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I should like an explanation of that bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill was reported by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH].

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. HATCH subsequently said: Mr. President, during the call of the calendar this morning I was unavoidably detained. I understand that when order of business 943, House bill 2953, was reached, some Senator asked for an explanation of the bill. I am not sure whether the bill was passed over or what happened to it.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, when the bill was first called and objection was made there was no one present to explain the bill. The Senator from New Mexico came into the Chamber later, and following that the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] objected.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator from Michigan not being in the Chamber at this moment, I will not ask that the bill be taken up in his absence.

The bill (S. 2575) to provide pensions, compensating retirement pay, and hospital benefits for certain Reserve officers of the Army of the United States, was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

DEPORTATION OF CRIMINAL ALIENS

The bill (H. R. 6724) to provide for the prompt deportation of aliens engaging in espionage or sabotage, alien criminals, and other undesirable aliens, was announced as next in order.

Mr. DANAHHER and Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, was objection made to the consideration of this bill? Personally, I heard no objection.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I objected only for the reason that two persons came to see me this morning in connection with the bill and said they had an amendment to offer. I was busy on the Monopoly Committee and had no opportunity to confer with them, and I told them to see me tomorrow. I have no objection to the consideration of the bill after I shall have received the amendment to which they referred. The amendment may be of such a nature that I would not care to offer it.

Mr. RUSSELL. The bill merely provides for the deportation of aliens who have been guilty of espionage or sabotage and have admitted in writing that they were guilty.

Mr. KING. I am in sympathy with the bill; and if the amendment to which reference has been made does not relate to some other point, I shall not object to the consideration of the bill.

REGISTRATION OF ALIENS

The bill (S. 2830) to provide for the registration of aliens was announced as next in order.

Mr. DANAHHER. Let the bill go over.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Connecticut will withdraw his objection. This bill was introduced by the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. STEWART] and has been favorably reported, as, of course, the Senator has observed, from the Committee on Immigration. The bill does not call for the fingerprinting of aliens, as does a bill which was introduced by me at the last session. In view of the conditions in the country today, particularly when we are reading so much about sabotage and espionage in the country, we must have some sort of check upon the thousands of aliens who are coming into the country; and the enactment of the bill certainly would be of benefit to the Department of Justice, and particularly the division now interesting itself in running down spies and saboteurs.

If the Senator will briefly glance over the bill—it is very short—I am sure he will withdraw his objection, in view of present conditions. I now see on the floor the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], a member of the committee, and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], its chairman; and I think they will bear out what I state in regard to the brevity of the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Carolina yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. KING. A moment ago I made objection to the consideration of order of business 957, upon the ground that a number of persons had called to see me and suggested an amendment, and I assumed they had reference to that bill. But as I now recall, the amendment which these persons desired to have offered was to the bill just reached on the calendar, and I wish to withdraw my objection to the bill to which I objected a moment ago. In view of the request which has been made, that I receive an amendment which the persons to whom I have referred desire to present, I shall ask that the bill just reached go over in order that I may consider the amendment. In the meantime, I shall be very glad to have the Senate recur to the bill to which I objected a few minutes ago.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I should like to have an objection noted to order of business 957, House bill 6724.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut objects to the present consideration of House bill 6724, and it will go over, as heretofore ordered.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, in answer to the Senator from North Carolina, I may say that I feel that this whole subject is of such a serious and fundamental nature, considering, as we must, the position for which this Nation has always stood, that no such bill should be passed on the Consent Calendar; that such a bill should be taken up and discussed in regular order, when made the order of business; and that it should be thoroughly discussed and its connotations and full import be understood. For these reasons I voice objection at this time.

I may also say that the senior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] notified my office this morning that, due to his unavoidable absence while engaged upon public business, he would appreciate my voicing his objection also to these measures, and I ask that the RECORD so indicate.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Of course, in view of the absence of the senior Senator from New York, and in view of the statement made by the Senator from Connecticut a moment ago, I would not ask for action on the bill just reached on the calendar. But in view of the statement the Senator from Connecticut just made in regard to the importance of such bills, I hope that we may come to some decision in regard to a time when a public hearing, by way of debate, may be had upon these bills in the Senate. Insofar as I personally am concerned, I am sincerely desirous of having a record vote on all these bills, which I deem of particular importance to the American Government and people at the present time.

Mr. DANAHER. I know we all appreciate the deep concern of the junior Senator from North Carolina, and we all share it. I will be glad to join him in expediting consideration in the fullest possible way.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I give notice that at the earliest possible date I shall move the consideration of Order of Business 957, House bill 6724. It is almost inconceivable, but at the present time there is no law providing for the mandatory deportation of any person guilty of espionage or sabotage in the United States. This is a very simple bill, only a little over one page in length, and I think, in view of world conditions today, that the bill should be considered at the earliest possible date in order that we may have some statutory provision for ridding this country of those who are convicted of espionage or the destruction of public property.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, in that connection I may add, for the information of Senators who are present today, that I have read a report by the Federal Bureau of Investigation to the effect that the number of complaints coming in from all parts of the United States with regard to espionage and sabotage increased over a thousandfold within the past 2 months. At this time I wish to give notice to the Senate that at the earliest possible date I shall move the consideration of Senate bill 2830.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 134) providing for continuing retirement pay under certain conditions of officers and former officers of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 6901) granting increase of pensions to certain widows of veterans of the Civil War, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2510) to promote the general welfare through the appropriation of funds to assist the States and Territories in providing more effective programs of public kindergarten or kindergarten and nursery-school education, was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 6687) to authorize the levy of State, Territory, and District of Columbia taxes upon, with respect to, or measured by sales, purchases, or use of tangible personal property or upon sellers, purchasers, or users of such property measured by sales, purchases, or use thereof occurring in United States national parks, military and other reservations or sites over which the United States Government may have jurisdiction was announced as next in order.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] spoke to me about this measure, which is being handled by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], and he asked that it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 7171) to amend section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

ADDITION OF LAND TO THE SIUSLAW NATIONAL FOREST

The bill (S. 929) to add certain lands to the Siuslaw National Forest in the State of Oregon was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, a bill of similar import has passed the House of Representatives, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be substituted for the Senate bill and acted upon at this time. The bill merely provides for taking property from the public domain and adding it to a national forest, because it is thought it is more suitable for forestry than for agriculture. It affects the watershed of a small community.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the House bill referred to by the Senator from Oregon is still in the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys of the Senate.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys be discharged from the further consideration of House bill 884, which is a bill of similar import to the Senate bill just reached on the calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oregon that the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys be discharged from the further consideration of House bill 884, and that it be substituted on the calendar for Senate bill 929 and be now considered?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 884) to add certain lands to the Siuslaw National Forest in the State of Oregon, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purpose of forest management and municipal watershed protection, the following-described lands, excepting such subdivisions as were revested in the ownership of the United States by the act approved June 9, 1916 (39 Stat. 218), or now are parts of the unappropriated public domain, are hereby added and made a part of the Siuslaw National Forest in the State of Oregon subject to valid existing rights, and all of the added lands owned by the United States shall hereafter be administered subject to all the laws and regulations governing the national forests: All of township 12 south, range 7 west; all of township 12 south, range 8 west; section 19, sections 29 to 32, inclusive, and sections 34 to 36, inclusive, in township 12 south, range 9 west; south half section 10, south half section 13, sections 14 and 15, sections 22 to 27, inclusive, and sections 34 to 36, inclusive, in township 12 south, range 10 west; sections 2 to 11, inclusive, sections 15 to 21, inclusive, and sections 30 and 31 in township 13 south, range 7 west; all of township 13 south, range 8 west; sections 1 to 5, inclusive, east half section 8, sections 9 and 10, north half section 11, sections 12 and 13, north half section 15, sections 16, 17, and 20, north half section 21 and sections 24 and 36 in township 13 south, range 9 west, all Willamette base and meridian.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, Senate bill 929 will be indefinitely postponed.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1935) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2103) to repeal the act entitled "An act to conserve and develop Indian lands and resources; to extend to Indians the right to form business and other organizations; to establish a credit system for Indians; to grant certain rights of home rule to Indians; to provide for vocational education for Indians; and for other purposes," approved June 18, 1934, and the act of June 15, 1935, supplementary thereto, was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

JOHN P. SHORTER

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 823) for the relief of John P. Shorter, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to John P. Shorter, of Newport News, Va., the sum of $3,500, in full settlement of all claims against the United States for expenses and injuries sustained as a result of a collision involving a United States Civilian Conservation Corps truck, on June 30, 1936: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LYLE L. BRESSLER

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2384) for the relief of Lyle L. Bressler, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, to insert a proviso, at the end of the bill, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury, be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Lyle L. Bressler the sum of $124.45, for reimbursement in the payment of his salary disallowed during the months of July, August, and September 1934, while employed in the Grand Teton National Park, Wyo.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ASSISTANCE TO MILITARY AND NAVAL ESTABLISHMENTS OF AMERICAN REPUBLICS

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 367) to authorize the Secretaries of War and of the Navy to assist the governments of American republics to increase their military and naval establishments, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of this measure.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. An explanation is requested.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in view of the fact that the joint resolution was reported by the distinguished senior Senator from Nevada, the President pro tempore of the Senate, who is now in the chair, I suggest that it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 5584) to amend the Canal Zone Code was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 174) for an investigation of negotiations by American citizens with the Mexican Government concerning certain oil sales was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This resolution is reported adversely.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 177) authorizing an investigation of negotiations by American citizens or officials with the Mexican Government concerning certain oil sales was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This resolution was reported adversely.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the resolution go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2773) to authorize the payment of compensation to recess appointees in certain cases was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. I think there should be an explanation of this bill.

Mr. KING. Let it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

PROTECTION OF WITNESSES BEFORE GOVERNMENTAL AGENCIES

The bill (H. R. 6832) to provide for the protection of witnesses appearing before any department, independent establishment, or other agency of the United States, or the Congress of the United States, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

KING'S CANYON NATIONAL PARK, CALIF.

The bill (H. R. 3794) to establish the King's Canyon National Park, Calif., to transfer thereto the lands now included in the General Grant National Park, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, this is a bill in which the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] is interested, and as to which I understand he desires to make a statement, but it is impossible for him to do so at this time, as he is at present presiding, and I suggest that the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, I think the Senator has confounded the bill with another, a bill to which I objected during the closing days of the last session. I withdrew my objection, after the matter was explained to me. I think it is a bill introduced by Mr. GEARHART, in the other House.

Mr. BARKLEY. Let me inquire of the Chair whether this is the bill which pertains to the King's Canyon National Park.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The senior Senator from Nevada objects to the present consideration of order of business 1157, House bill 3794, and it will go over.

INVESTIGATION OF CONDITIONS IN PUERTO RICO

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 18) providing for an investigation of the social, economic, and industrial conditions in Puerto Rico, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, at the last session of Congress this measure was deemed very important, and it may be important now, but I understand that the present Governor of Puerto Rico is in this city, and in view of that fact, and in view of the opportunity to be afforded of conferring with him relative to the importance of this measure at the present time, I ask that it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The concurrent resolution will be passed over.

ENLARGEMENT OF ROCKY MOUNTAIN NATIONAL PARK

The resolution (S. Res. 147) authorizing an investigation of the matter of the proposed enlargement of Rocky Mountain National Park was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, or any subcommittee thereof, hereby is authorized to make a thorough investigation of all questions relating to the proposed enlargement of Rocky Mountain National Park in the State of Colorado.

For the purposes of this resolution the said committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized during the Seventy-sixth Congress to hold hearings; to sit and act at such times and places; to require by subpoena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents; to administer such oaths; to take such testimony; and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not exceed 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $6,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

INVESTIGATION OF IMMIGRATION OF ALIENS

The resolution (S. Res. 168) providing for an investigation of the immigration of aliens into the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. DANAHER. Let the resolution go over.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. President, I give notice at this time that at the first convenient opportunity I will call up this measure for consideration by the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being heard, the resolution will be passed over.

SICK-LEAVE BENEFITS TO CERTAIN GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES

The bill (S. 2876) to amend the Annual and Sick Leave Acts of March 14, 1936, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let us have an explanation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. An explanation is requested.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, this bill merely gives to employees of the Navy Yard, the Government Printing Office, and other departments operating on a 5-day schedule the same annual- and sick-leave rights enjoyed by other employees of the Government. It is endorsed by the Civil Service Commission, and I think it is a very meritorious measure.

Mr. KING. I withdraw the objection.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the days of annual leave with pay provided for in the act of March 14, 1936 (49 Stat. 1161), and the days of sick leave with pay provided for in the act of March 14, 1936 (49 Stat. 1162), shall mean days upon which employees would otherwise work and receive pay, and shall be exclusive of Sundays which do not occur within a regular tour of duty, holidays, and all nonwork days established by Federal statute or by Executive or administrative order.

MUNICIPAL AND PUBLIC UTILITY BONDS, ALASKA

The bill (H. R. 5919) to provide for the refunding of the bonds of municipal corporations and public-utility districts in the Territory of Alaska, to validate bonds which have heretofore been issued by a municipal corporation or any public-utility district in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 282) to provide that State employees employed in connection with programs carried on with the assistance of the Federal Government be selected in accordance with a nonpolitical civil-service plan was announced as next in order.

Mr. MINTON. I ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 7050) for the relief of certain former disbursing officers for the Civil Works Administration was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

GDYNIA AMERICA LINE, INC.

The bill (H. R. 3087) for the relief of the Gdynia America Line, Inc., of New York City, N. Y., was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMERICAN INSURANCE CO.

The bill (H. R. 3363) for the relief of the American Insurance Co. of New Jersey was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN CAULEY

The bill (H. R. 3912) for the relief of the heirs of John Cauley, deceased, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN L. MORKOVSKY, ETC.

The bill (H. R. 4813) for the relief of the estates of Marie R. Morkovsky and Alphons Morkovsky, both deceased, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MAJ. NOE C. KILLIAN

The bill (H. R. 5369) for the relief of Maj. Noe C. Killian was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OHIO RIVER FLOOD OF 1937, CAIRO, ILL.

The bill (H. R. 3051) for the relief of certain workers performing emergency work at Cairo, Ill., in the Ohio River flood of 1937, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1450) to provide funds for cooperation with school district No. 13, Froid, Mont., for extension of public-school buildings to be available to Indian children, was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2523) to provide for the construction, extension, equipment, and improvement of public-school facilities at McCurtain, Okla., Haskell County, was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1671) to provide for the construction, extension, and improvement of public-school buildings in Uintah County, Utah, was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

INVESTIGATION OF UNEMPLOYMENT AND RELIEF

The resolution (S. Res. 180) continuing the special committee on investigation of unemployment and relief and increasing the limit of expenditures, was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That Senate Resolution 36, agreed to June 10, 1937, authorizing a Special Committee to Study, Survey, and Investigate Problems of Unemployment and Relief hereby is extended in full force and effect during the Seventy-sixth Congress and the said committee hereby is authorized to expend from the contingent fund of the Senate the sum of $10,000 in addition to the amount heretofore authorized for such purpose.

GEORGE E. MILLER

The bill (H. R. 6804) for the relief of George E. Miller, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NEVADA SILICA SANDS, INC.

The bill (H. R. 7327) for the relief of the Nevada Silica Sands, Inc., was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 5138) to make unlawful attempts to interfere with the discipline of the Army, the Navy, and the Coast Guard; to require deportation of certain classes of aliens; to require the fingerprinting of aliens seeking to enter the United States; and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. DANAHER. I ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 4532) to make effective in the District Court of the United States for Puerto Rico rules promulgated by the Supreme Court of the United States, governing pleading, practice, and procedure in the district courts of the United States, was announced as next in order.

Mr. DANAHER. I ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 7293) to amend section 355 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, to make permissive the acquisition of legislative jurisdiction over land or interest in land acquired by the United States, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I think there ought to be some explanation of that bill. Let it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over. That concludes the calendar.

DEPORTATION OF CRIMINAL ALIENS

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 6724, Calendar No. 957.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6724) to provide for the prompt deportation of aliens engaging in espionage or sabotage, alien criminals, and other undesirable aliens, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted etc., That an alien who entered the United States either from a foreign territory or an insular possession, either before or after the passage of this act, shall be promptly deported in the manner provided in sections 19 and 20 of the Immigration Act of February 5, 1917, as amended, regardless of when he entered, if he—

(1) Has admitted in writing that he has engaged in, or been convicted of, espionage or sabotage for a foreign government since entry into the United States; or

(2) Has at any time after entry been convicted of a violation of, or conspiracy to violate, any narcotic law of the United States, or of any State, Territory, insular possession, or of the District of Columbia; or

(3) Has been lawfully committed to a public or private institution as a habitual user of narcotic drugs.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, this is an exceedingly brief bill, and passed the House of Representatives unanimously at the last session of the Congress. It was considered by the Committee on Immigration, and favorably reported unanimously by that committee to the Senate Calendar. The bill merely undertakes to add to the classes of offenses for which aliens may be subject to deportation, the crimes of espionage or sabotage for a foreign government since entry into the United States. It therefore makes mandatory the deportation of any alien who has been guilty of either of these two offenses.

It further adds to the classes of deportable aliens those who have admitted in writing that they have engaged in espionage or sabotage. It also adds one other class, Mr. President. It adds to the category of crimes for which aliens are deportable the violation of any of the narcotic laws of the United States or of any of the several States.

Mr. President, I cannot see why there should be any substantial objections to the bill, particularly at the present time, when we are engaged in a great program attempting to bring the armed forces of the United States into such a condition as to enable them to defend this country, when the whole world is filled not only with war but with intrigue, and when attempts are being made to violate those laws which seek to protect the secrets of the American Government that are essential to our national defense, to enable the industries and the manufacturers of the United States to proceed about their business and give employment to American laborers, and not to be wrecked by aliens who have no right to be here and who are in the employ of a foreign government.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a question?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. What is the Senator's interpretation of the word "espionage" as he has used it in his bill?

Mr. RUSSELL. I assume the word "espionage" as used in the bill would have the same meaning as the definition of "espionage" contained in the statutes of the United States.

Mr. AUSTIN. And nothing else?

Mr. RUSSELL. I think under strict interpretation it would go no further than that.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, assuming that a friendly foreign country through its embassy should maintain a vigilant watch over exportations from our ports in the United States to the ports of a belligerent country with which the first country was at war, would such an activity fall within the Senator's understanding of the word "espionage"?

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator has submitted a hypothetical case. He is an able lawyer and is undoubtedly more familiar with the laws relating to espionage in this country than I am. I will ask the Senator to answer his own question.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I really rose for information. I thank the distinguished Senator for his compliment, but, for information, I wanted the Senator's interpretation of his own language.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont a question. Suppose that the United States has in Germany, or some other country, a representative of the State Department or of the Department of Justice charged with the responsibility and the duty of investigating to see whether or not persons are conspiring to enter the United States in violation of our immigration laws. If that foreign country had in force a law similar to the proposed measure, would that American representative be guilty of espionage?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I do not know.

Mr. KING. The question which the Senator from Vermont asked interested me, and I was wondering what the situation would be if the same sort of bill were enacted into law in some foreign country in respect to the activities of our immigration authorities, and we have some who are, as I am advised, making inquiries to determine whether or not persons in foreign countries are seeking to come to the United States in violation of our law. I was wondering if our officials there could be charged with being guilty of espionage under those circumstances.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I cannot answer that question. The thing I noticed about this measure that in part caused my inquiry is the language "engaged in." The language, "has admitted in writing that he has engaged in * * * espionage" broadens the scope of the measure a great deal—far beyond the statutes of the United States defining "espionage," and I am wondering if the Senator from Georgia so interprets it himself.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, my judgment is that that language, "engaged in," was placed in the bill to enable the deportation of those who were guilty of espionage without the expense and the difficulty of having a trial in the courts. If the persons in question admitted that they were engaged in espionage within the meaning of the statutes of the United States they would be subject to deportation whether or not they had been convicted of that offense.

Mr. AUSTIN. I can consent to that readily, and I am for a bill that calls for deportation if a person has violated a Federal statute of the United States, whether he has been convicted or simply admits it. That is perfectly satisfactory to me.

Mr. RUSSELL. That is the purpose of the bill.

Mr. AUSTIN. That is perfectly satisfactory to me, and if that is the limit of the scope of the bill, I should favor it without any question.

Mr. RUSSELL. That is my construction of the bill, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. Does not the Senator from Georgia feel that it would be sufficient if it were simply provided in the first paragraph that one should be deportable if he had been convicted of espionage or sabotage? Does not the Senator feel that it lends itself so easily to oppression simply to say that a man may be deported who has admitted in writing that he is engaged in espionage and sabotage? We know how the third degree works. We know that at times there are men in the Federal service who are not averse to using the third degree, and some of them are quite adept in using it. I can very readily visualize a situation where an unfortunate fellow whom they wanted to get rid of, whom they wanted to run out of the country, who probably could not be convicted and never had been convicted, could be high-pressured into signing a written statement that he had been engaged in espionage or sabotage, and perhaps he would not know what they were talking about. So it seems to me that the provision for deportation ought to be confined to a conviction either on the defendant's plea of guilty or after trial.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, that question, of course, might arise in any deportation case. Undoubtedly there may be times when officers of the law resort to means which we might not condone or approve to procure admissions from those charged with crime or not charged with crime. Such a thing is just as likely to happen in any criminal case as in a deportation proceeding.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. Is it customary under the immigration laws to deport individuals upon their admission that they have been engaged in some criminal offense? I am asking only for information because I do not know.

Mr. RUSSELL. The immigration laws of this Nation are more badly in need of clarification and revision than any other laws that I know about. But I do not recall any existing provision whereby admission of crime on the part of an individual is sufficient to bring about deportation.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for an inquiry?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. The first and second subsections of the bill seem to me to be entirely in accord with the argument and reasons advanced. That is, they are for the purpose of protecting the Government against hostile aliens. I am wondering whether or not the same argument applies to subsection 3, which provides for the deportation of unfortunate individuals who might become committed to either public or private institutions as users of narcotic drugs. I can conceive of someone who might have come to the United States as a perfectly law-abiding individual, and who, by reason of unfortunate circumstances, might have become a user of drugs. I question whether we should deport such an individual, or whether we should put the burden of deportation upon the Government. I do not see that subsection 3 is supported by the argument advanced in support of subsections 1 and 2.

Mr. RUSSELL. I confess that the statement made by the Senator from Colorado is correct, in that the argument that the bill is necessary to protect the interests of the United States as a nation, from the standpoint of national defense, does not apply to subsection 3. However, Mr. President, in the commission of a crime our laws have always recognized some distinction between an alien who is not a citizen and one who is a citizen of the United States. We have statutes providing for the deportation of aliens who are guilty of porstitution, or other crimes involving moral turpitude. Those same laws, of course, do not apply to citizens of the United States. I assume that the reason for the incorporation of section 3 into the bill was to avoid the expense which might accrue to taxpayers of the United States who are citizens of the United States, in maintaining at an expensive institution for a long period of time an alien who is a drug addict. He is only deported, however, after a legal proceeding by which he is judicially committed to an institution as a drug addict.

Mr. ADAMS. However, under subsection 3 we would deport one who was amply able to pay his own way, and who was committed to a private institution.

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes. However, we can never have any law which does not work some hardship in individual cases. I cannot believe there will be any great number of aliens deported under this section who are able to defray their own expenses in such an institution.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] whether he does not think that the language in the first subsection is ambiguous. As I read it, it might well be read to mean that the alien must admit in writing that he has been convicted. I do not think that is what the Senator intends. The language reads, "has admitted in writing that he has engaged in or been convicted of espionage," and so forth. It would seem that a man who admitted that he had been convicted would be deported, but a man who refused to admit that he had been convicted could not be deported. I feel, as does the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], that the theory of admission is a bad precedent. If agreeable to the Senator from Georgia, I should like to offer an amendment, striking out entirely the words "admitted in writing that he had engaged in, or".

Mr. RUSSELL. I understood that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON] had already offered that amendment to the bill.

Mr. MINTON. I have not offered it, but I think it ought to be offered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no amendment at the desk. The bill is open to amendment.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 1, lines 9 and 10, it is proposed to strike out the words "admitted in writing that he has engaged in, or."

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I could not accept that amendment. To do so would greatly weaken the bill. In my opinion if a person admits that he has been guilty of violating the laws of the United States pertaining to espionage or sabotage, this country should not then be compelled to go to the expense of a long trial in the courts, which would perhaps result in appeal, the accused being released upon bond and being free to commit other acts of sabotage or espionage. I should be as willing to accept the statement of the Federal officials that no third-degree methods were invoked in a case as to presume that any alien who might admit in writing that he had engaged in espionage or sabotage had been mistreated and forced to sign some expression of guilt of an offense of which he had never heard. I think that if a person has admitted in writing that he is an alien and not a citizen of this country, and that he has been guilty of acts of espionage or sabotage, he should immediately and forthwith be compelled to leave the United States. Otherwise he might be released on bond and might commit some other act of espionage or sabotage. Perhaps he might destroy some great industry engaged in the manufacture of supplies necessary for the national defense. Perhaps he might wipe out hundreds of lives of American citizens, merely because we had been too careful and meticulous in dealing with an alien who had admitted in writing that he had been guilty of a violation of the laws of the land. I hope the Senate will reject the amendment. Our first duty is to protect these United States and our own citizens. This bill will work no hardship on any law-abiding alien. It does not go as far as I would personally like to go in dealing with such cases.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, when this matter was under consideration last summer we discussed it briefly; and at that time I voiced an objection based upon the very language appearing in lines 9 and 10 which has been made the subject of the proffered amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT].

However, Mr. President, that is not the only thing that is wrong with the bill. If we look at line 4, we find that it provides:

That an alien who entered the United States either from a foreign territory or an insular possession, either before or after the passage of this act, shall be promptly deported.

And so forth, assuming that the alien comes within the later provisions.

The Supreme Court of the United States has held time and again that under our Constitution an alien is entitled to the same protection as a citizen with reference to convictions. If we pass the bill, we shall enact a statute in direct contravention of the provision of our Constitution which inveighs against ex post facto legislation, and increase the penalty with reference to acts committed prior to the passage of the law.

That is the first objection which applies with reference to line 4.

With reference to lines 9 and 10, anyone who has ever been a prosecuting official knows very well that many an accused person will sign a paper purporting to be a confession. The Supreme Court of the United States time and again has had before it cases arising under what is called the action of overzealous officers. Of course, Mr. President, officers seeking convictions will, in their zeal, undertake to obtain deportation of an alien who cannot otherwise be convicted, by getting him to make an admission in writing that he has been guilty—of what? Of what the bill purports to call espionage—not espionage as defined in the act of June 1, 1917, which was our so-called espionage act; not sabotage, which is not defined at all as a matter of Federal statute. Consequently, the bill is open to the objection that it should define an offense within the terms of already existing statutes of the United States.

If we turn to subsection 2 of the bill we find that it provides that an alien may be deported at any time after entry. He may be brought to the United States when he is a month old, or 6 months old. He may be convicted when he is 55 years of age. He may never have heard of the foreign country to which someone undertakes to deport him.

Mr. President, such procedure would be brutal and inhuman. The reports of our circuit courts of appeal are full of decisions in habeas corpus actions brought pursuant to attempts to deport under existing law; and time and again the courts have relieved against the hardships which would be involved if the head of a family were deported for a crime which we define in the United States to be a crime involving moral turpitude. Under subsection 2 we would make automatically deportable anyone who violates the narcotics laws of the United States, or of any State. In the District of Columbia, high-school students have been prosecuted for smoking or possessing marijuana weed. It is perfectly ridiculous to think that such persons, having once been convicted, could be automatically deported.

It seems to me that the objections voiced by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] amply dispose of subsection 3. I dare say there are known to Members of the Senate persons who unfortunately have become addicted to the use of narcotics, and who have, thereafter, been committed to institutions. Under the terms of the bill, such persons, if aliens, would automatically become deportable.

Mr. President, the bill has a number of very vicious provisions, notwithstanding the fact that the declared objective with reference to those who might be properly convicted is highly laudable.

If the bill were limited to deporting after conviction those who actually commit acts of sabotage or espionage as defined by our laws, I still have sufficient faith in our institutions to feel that the rights of all accused would be protected. I believe that after conviction such persons ought to be deported. The report of the committee says—

While almost inconceivable, the present law does not require deportation of an alien after conviction on espionage or sabotage.

I am willing to correct that defect. I am willing to deport aliens so convicted. However, we know what happens to aliens in time of war or threatened war, or in time of hysteria. Everyone of us can remember what happened to persons of German extraction within our borders in 1917 and 1918. We can remember what hysteria did to them.

We can lose public confidence by the passage of this bill. I believe it should be defeated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MINTON in the chair). The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT].

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I should like to say that I think the first clause of the second paragraph, as written, seems to be very ambiguous; it can be construed in several ways; but, of course, it could be construed in the way most favorable to the alien, and, if so construed, it seems to me that if he admits in writing that he has been convicted of espionage or sabotage for a foreign government, he can be deported, but when he refuses to admit that has been so convicted he cannot be deported. As I read English, I think the words to which I have referred should be separated or placed in some other connection than they now appear.

I quite agree with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER] that no alien ought to be deported because in private he admits in writing some act with no opportunity for consultation with an attorney and no opportunity to present his case to a court. If he really, seriously, is willing to make an admission in writing, he ought to be willing to plead guilty, and then there would be no expense connected with his conviction.

So I think if this bill should stand at all, the words I propose to strike out certainly should be eliminated. An alien should only be deported when he is actually convicted after a plea either of guilty or not guilty of espionage or sabotage.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, the bill under consideration, in my opinion, should not be acted upon by the Senate today until other action is taken to strengthen deportation machinery, notwithstanding we have agreed to consider it. There is pending on the calendar a bill reported by the Committee on the Judiciary which deals, to a certain extent, with the issue involved in the pending measure.

Last year there were 460 aliens who had been ordered deported from the United States. They had been convicted of conspiracy to violate our narcotic laws, or of other crimes for the commission of which aliens are actually deportable. However, when it comes to deporting them we cannot find any place to which to send them. If we pass this bill, I do not think we would be strengthening the immigration laws, because now, under the act of 1913, the Government has the right to deport any alien convicted of a violation or who admits his connection with the violation of the narcotic laws.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President—

Mr. MILLER. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. RUSSELL. I am sure that the able Senator who has considered the bill to which he refers must be aware of the fact that there is not any law anywhere that provides for the deportation of any alien guilty of a violation of any State narcotic act.

Mr. MILLER. Not of a State narcotic act; no.

Mr. RUSSELL. No, sir; nor of a conspiracy to violate the Federal Narcotic Act. The present law merely covers a conviction on a single indictment of an individual alien.

Mr. MILLER. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Georgia to a provision of the act of February 18, 1931, which is entitled "An act to provide for the deportation of aliens convicted and sentenced for violation of any law regulating traffic in narcotics."

I should like to have my position understood by the Senator from Georgia. I am just as much in favor as is he or anyone else of deporting any alien who does not conform to all our laws; I am willing to go that far. I do not think we have any room for an alien who violates any kind of American law. I do not care who he may be; if he is an alien, if he cannot come here and abide by our laws let him go back whence he came. But the point I am getting at—and I think it is a serious question—is that we have today in the United States over 460 aliens whom the proper authorities of our country have solemnly adjudged should be deported, and yet they are running loose in this land just as free as any citizen of the United States, and there is no place to which to send them, and nothing to do with them. We cannot even detain them under existing law.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MILLER. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Is it not true that they have prior to this time served a sentence in some penitentiary or prison camp or other institution for the crimes which they committed?

Mr. MILLER. That may be true in some cases; I would not say it is true in all cases. They may have served a term for the violation of some particular law.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. And failure to deport them is entirely due to the neglect of the Government to find a place to which to send them?

Mr. MILLER. That is it exactly.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I do not want to get into a discussion of the other bill which has been reported by the Judiciary Committee, but it seems to me, after we have sent aliens to the penitentiary for the commission of crime and then the Government cannot find a place to send them when it wants to deport them that we have no right, in justice, to send them to some concentration camp for the rest of their lives merely because we cannot find a place in a foreign country to which to send them.

Mr. MILLER. Then I submit to the learned Senator, if that be true, why enter an order of deportation against them? That is the point. There are now outstanding, as I have said, many warrants of deportation that cannot be executed.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, may I answer the question of the Senator from Washington?

Mr. MILLER. I am glad to yield.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I say enter an order of deportation against alien criminals if they ought to be deported, for the reason that then we will be provided an opportunity to make inquiry of the country from which they came as to whether or not such country will receive the aliens who were formerly their nationals; and if the country from which they came has been absorbed or embodied in a part and portion of another country, as were Czechoslovakia and Austria, then let us make the demand on the present Government of Germany that they take back these criminal aliens.

Mr. MILLER. Then what will we do if they do not take them back?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Then we can bring about negotiations as a result of which, possibly, they would take them back. We might make some arrangements so that they would take them back.

Mr. MILLER. I am more interested in the arrangements than anything else.

Mr. REYNOLDS. There are plenty of means and ways by which we can make foreign countries take back their alien criminals, if we want them to do it. The trouble about it, I will say to the Senator from Arkansas, is that our Government has never made a real effort to make these countries take back their alien criminals.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President—

Mr. MILLER. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am glad to yield, if I may be permitted.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Assuming that the Senator from North Carolina is correct in his statement—and I do not know whether he is correct or not; I am not disputing his statement—and assuming that our Government never made a real effort to get some other government to take back criminal aliens, and there is such an alien who has violated a law and has been sentenced to the penitentiary for, let us say, 2 years, and then to be deported, in view of the Senator's statement that our Government has not made an effort to return such aliens to the countries whence they came, does he think there is anything fair or just, after that time, because we cannot, through the neglect of our Government, get them into another country, that we should send such aliens further to jail or to concentration camps, whatever they may be called?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I do not think so. I am in thorough accord with what the Senator suggests in regard to that.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, I expect to vote for this bill, but I shall vote for it with the consciousness that we are merely adding a list of persons who may become deportable without providing a means of taking care of and enforcing their deportation, and that we are turning loose upon this Nation, under warrant of deportation, men who cannot under existing law and existing arrangements be deported.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS]—a man who has given a great deal of thought to this question—has said that this Nation has not made the proper attempt to persuade foreign countries to grant passports or to take back the persons whom we have found deportable. I do not know about that; but I assume that the Department of Labor and the immigration authorities, under the judgments of the courts of this Nation, have exerted every influence they can. I do not know what the solution of the problem is. I come from a portion of the country where, fortunately, we have very few, if any, men who may be subject to deportation. I do not know what the answer is; but I am convinced that this is a problem to which the Senate should give serious consideration, and that we should not continue to create additional classes of men subject to deportation without providing a means of sustaining the sovereignty of this Nation and actually deporting them.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I was very much interested in the remarks of the Senator from Arkansas. I am not familiar with the details of the legislation to which he refers, which provides for some method of handling something like 460 cases of aliens who have been convicted of various crimes which make them subject to deportation, and who, he says, cannot be sent back to the lands whence they came; but I must confess that the argument is most unusual that nothing should be done to increase the classes of deportable aliens, that persons who have taken advantage of the blessings of our Government and who are citizens of other countries may with impunity violate the laws of the United States or of the several States without deportation, merely because a small number of them cannot be sent back to the countries from which they came.

While I have not the figures before me at this time, we have deported each year far more than 460 persons whom we could send back to some countries; and certainly I am not in favor of repealing the law which says that an alien guilty of murder shall be deported merely because, perchance, we have found some one alien who has committed murder, and cannot induce the country from which he came to take him back. I certainly should not be in favor of limiting the classes of crime which subject aliens to deportation merely because this small number have been found who cannot be sent back to the countries from which they came.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. MILLER. The Senator misunderstood me if he thinks I am opposed to the bill under consideration. I was trying to point out the necessity of strengthening it, if it can be done.

Mr. RUSSELL. I heartily agree with the Senator from Arkansas. I expect to support the bill to which he refers when it comes before the Senate.

Mr. MILLER. But I doubt the advisability of enacting further legislation until we give earnest consideration to the machinery of deportation in this Nation. Notwithstanding my own opinion about that matter, however, I expect to vote for the bill, because, as I have already stated, I should like to see all aliens who violate laws of any kind sent back to the countries from which they came.

Mr. RUSSELL. I thank the Senator. We will certainly not disagree about that proposition. I entertain similar views.

Mr. President, there has been some criticism of the language contained in section 1. It may be that the language is susceptible to clarification. I have an amendment which I intend to offer when and if the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio (Mr. TAFT) shall have been disposed of, and I ask unanimous consent that my amendment be read. I think this language will clarify section 1 so that there can be no misunderstanding about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 1 it is proposed to strike out lines 9 and 10 to the word "espionage" and insert:

Has been convicted of or has admitted in writing that he has engaged in—

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. RUSSELL. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. What does the Senator think of adding to that language the following words for the purpose of making specific the meaning which he has already stated this language has, namely:

As defined in the act of June 15, 1917 (40 Stat. 217).

That would make the meaning of this statute, where it uses the word "espionage," the same as stated in the Espionage Act of 1917, which has had interpretation.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I do not think the addition is at all necessary, but I have no objection to the proposal.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I move to amend the amendment of the Senator from Georgia by adding those words to it, namely:

As defined in the act of June 15, 1917 (40 Stat. 217).

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, my amendment is pending. The amendment to which the Senator from Vermont is offering an amendment is not yet before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct, as the Chair understands. The amendment of the Senator from Georgia is not before the Senate.

Mr. TAFT. I may say that the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia meets the objection I made by clearing up the ambiguity. I still am opposed, however, to a provision which permits deportation upon someone's admission in writing that he has done something. I think he ought at least to go as far as pleading guilty before that is done. So I should like to insist on my amendment, and ask the Senate to adopt it, in order that a man may be deported only when he is convicted, and not when he has in some way in private admitted that he is guilty of some crime, perhaps even without the advice of counsel.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio (Mr. TAFT).

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I wish to discuss the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio.

The Senator from Ohio objects to the deportation of any alien who admits that he has been guilty of espionage or sabotage. I desire to say to the Senator from Ohio that the American people are more lenient with aliens than are the people of any other country in the world. Indeed, I may say there are times when our court officials and our law-enforcement officers as a matter of fact lean over backward in order to be able to give the benefit of the doubt to the alien criminal who has been arrested.

In this country we have pampered and coddled aliens. We treat aliens better than they are treated in any other country upon the face of the earth. I am glad of that, because I wish to have the American people maintain their reputation of being big-hearted people, and people who are considerate of their fellow men; but it seems that every time there is brought to the floor of the Senate or the House of Representatives a bill that would protect the American people against the alien hordes in this country, there is opposition to the passage of any legislation of that sort proposed for the protection of the American people.

Mr. President, if there is in this country any alien who has little enough sense to admit that he has done something that he has not actually done, he ought to be deported. [Laughter.] He ought not to be in this community or any other community of the country. If, by the passage of this measure, we can rid ourselves of the class of aliens who will admit the commission of a crime that they did not commit, it is a good thing to do; for if they have not any more sense than that we do not want them.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I think the Senator from North Carolina will agree that this is probably the first time since I have been in the Senate that I have agreed with him about a bill on this subject; but I do not want the RECORD to show that I am agreeing with the Senator from North Carolina in his last statement as to the right of deportation of aliens.

I wonder if the Senator would not be willing to put the matter on this basis: While it is true that the Department has certain rights with reference to deportation, is it not also true that any alien subject to deportation has a right to go into court to protect himself against the action of the Department?

Is it not also true that, as a practical matter, when Members of Congress are appealed to by aliens in reference to cases where there is feeling that some injustice has been done or is being done to the alien, it is customary to have a bill introduced in Congress, and as a result of such bill to have a very thorough investigation by the appropriate committee in the House or in the Senate? So the rights of aliens are protected. While the language of this particular measure in which it is stated that merely an admission of guilt by the individual is sufficient may seem to be pretty strict and stringent, nevertheless there are ways by which every alien may be protected if he has been overreached by the authorities in signing the statement.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, in answer to the statement and inquiry of the Senator, I will say that if under the bill an alien were to admit that he had been guilty of espionage or sabotage, and was thereby, under the terms of the bill, subject to deportation, through the introduction of a private bill in Congress for the relief of that alien relief could be obtained. Numerous bills of that character are on the calendar, having been introduced for the relief of aliens by Members of the Senate and the House.

If an alien in this country admits that he is guilty of espionage, or if an alien admits that he is guilty of sabotage, I say that he ought to be deported; and this bill ought to be enacted in order that our officials may have sufficient authority to bring about the deportation of such an alien criminal.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. Before the Senator leaves the point he was discussing a moment ago with the Senator from Washington, I wish to suggest a thought which came to me, and I should like to know whether my understanding is correct. Let us suppose that an alien is forced, by third-degree methods or otherwise, to sign an untrue admission of guilt, and deportation charges are brought against him based on such involuntary, forced admission; has the writ of habeas corpus been suspended in this country?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Not at all.

Mr. HATCH. Could not such an alien secure relief through the courts?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Certainly. He would have a right to avail himself of a writ of habeas corpus.

Mr. HATCH. Suppose such a showing as I have assumed should be made in any court in the land, would relief be denied?

Mr. REYNOLDS. It would not be denied. In addition to that, the man affected would be provided with the same relief which has been suggested by the able Senator from Washington.

In view of the fact that we are going to vote on this measure today, according to my understanding, I should like to have the RECORD show that this bill has been designed for the deportation of aliens engaged in espionage or sabotage, alien criminals, and other undesirable aliens. I ask at this time that the bill be printed in the RECORD in full, and I also ask that it be followed by the report submitted by the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], the chairman of the Committee on Immigration of the Senate.

There being no objection, the bill and report were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

H. R. 6724

Be it enacted, etc., That an alien who entered the United States either from a foreign territory or an insular possession, either before or after the passage of this act, shall be promptly deported in the manner provided in sections 19 and 20 of the Immigration Act of February 5, 1917, as amended, regardless of when he entered, if he—

(1) Has admitted in writing that he has engaged in, or been convicted of, espionage or sabotage for a foreign government since entry into the United States; or

(2) Has at any time after entry been convicted of a violation of, or conspiracy to violate, any narcotic law of the United States, or of any State, Territory, insular possession, or of the District of Columbia; or

(3) Has been lawfully committed to a public or private institution as a habitual user of narcotic drugs.

[Report No. 918]

The Committee on Immigration, to whom was referred the bill H. R. 6724, to provide for the prompt deportation of aliens engaging in espionage or sabotage, alien criminals, and other undesirable aliens, having considered the same, report favorably thereon without amendment and recommend that the bill do pass.

PURPOSE OF THE BILL

The purpose of this bill is to strengthen the deportation laws and especially to expedite deportation of aliens engaged in espionage or sabotage, alien criminals, and other undesirable aliens.

GENERAL INFORMATION

While almost inconceivable, the present law does not require deportation of an alien after conviction on espionage or sabotage. Said deportation is at this time a matter of discretion with the Secretary of Labor, who must take affirmative action against the alien after conviction before any deportation can be had.

There is no authority at this time for the deportation of any alien who has been convicted of a violation of our narcotic laws unless such alien was convicted of violation of certain phases of these laws and then only after an affirmative order by the Secretary of Labor.

The committee feel that aliens guilty of violations of our laws against espionage, sabotage, or of our narcotic law should be automatically deported. This bill provides such automatic deportation as well as the deportation of those aliens lawfully committed as habitual users of narcotic drugs.

It was pointed out that such legislation as contained in this bill was necessary in order to provide for the prompt deportation of the classes of aliens specified in the bill, not always possible under the present law.

After a thorough discussion of the provisions of the bill and the present procedure under existing law, the bill was ordered reported favorably, with recommendation that the bill do pass.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, a report was submitted on this bill in the House of Representatives by Mr. POAGE, from the Committee on Naturalization and Immigration, and the bill was passed in the House on July 6, 1937. The report reads:

The Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6724) to provide for the prompt deportation of aliens engaging in espionage or sabotage, alien criminals, and other undesirable aliens, having considered the same, report favorably thereon without amendment and recommend that the bill do pass.

PURPOSE OF THE BILL

The purpose of this bill is to strengthen the deportation laws and especially to expedite deportation of aliens engaged in espionage or sabotage, alien criminals, and other undesirable aliens.

I should like to call this especially to the attention of the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER. I am following the Senator.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I call attention to the report made to the House, to the effect that under the present law we have a right to deport aliens who have been convicted of certain provisions of the Narcotics Act, but before they can be deported there must be an order issued by the Secretary of Labor.

Under the bill now under consideration, as reported by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], I understand no order will have to be issued by the Secretary of Labor.

The report to the House proceeds:

GENERAL INFORMATION

While almost inconceivable, the present law does not require deportation of an alien after conviction on espionage or sabotage. Said deportation is at this time a matter of discretion with the Secretary of Labor, who must take affirmative action against the alien after conviction before any deportation can be had.

There is no authority at this time for the deportation of any alien who has been convicted of a violation of our narcotic laws unless such alien was convicted of violation of certain phases of these laws and then only after an affirmative order by the Secretary of Labor.

The committee feel that aliens guilty of violations of our laws against espionage, sabotage, or of our narcotics laws should be automatically deported. This bill provides such automatic deportation.

Mr. President, the able Senator from Georgia, in addressing the Members of this body a short time ago, brought out the fact that of all times in the history of the Nation, particularly in this time, and the hour, as a matter of fact, when we should give thorough consideration to his bill, and that we should pass his bill, because, as he has stated, sabotage is general throughout the entire land, and our governmental forces centered in the Department of Justice realize that our entire Nation is honeycombed today with spies, even when we are not at war. I ask Senators to imagine what would happen in this country if we were engaged in war. The measure before us, reported by the able Senator from Georgia, looks to the future, as well as to this hour, for the purpose of protecting the American people and the American Nation as a whole.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. HOLMAN. At this time I remind the Senator from North Carolina of a sentence on page 175 of the hearings before the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives, a statement by Mr. Shaughnessy, of the Bureau of Immigration:

We have no machinery and no law for keeping constant vigilance over aliens illegally here or aliens legally here.

It seems to me it is high time that a reform of our immigration laws should be effected.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I thank the able Senator for his fine contribution.

Mr. President, let us for a moment, because we can afford to do so, take time to consider that which I am about to bring to the attention of the Senate, because there is no other subject before the American people of greater importance than that of protecting American industries and the American people.

I wish to refer to the subject of sabotage which was discussed by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] in his statement made a moment ago. I find before me now a copy of the Washington Daily News, issue of Monday, January 8, 1940. There the blazing headline screams across the front page as follows:

G-men probing plot to blast big dam.

The story on the front page in the form of a bulletin is as follows:

Federal agents "have investigated and are now investigating" reports of a plot to blow up Boulder Dam, J. Edgar Hoover, Federal Bureau of Investigation director, said today.

The chief G-man would not discuss what the investigation had disclosed.

He pointed out that G-men, after studying the dam, made certain recommendations for safeguards to protect the dam and its huge power generating equipment. These protective measures were ordered last month.

Mr. Hoover first received rumors of a plot more than a month ago. He sent agents from Washington by airplane to Boulder Dam. These agents made a close study of the project and returned with recommendations deemed necessary for its protection.

John C. Page, Reclamation Commissioner, who has charge of the dam, said to his knowledge the investigation had revealed no basis for the plot rumors. He said there had been no change in precautionary measures taken at the dam site last month. Those precautions included closer surveillance of tourists visiting the dam, and the placing of a screen 400 yards above the dam on Lake Mead to keep boats or floating objects away.

He pointed out it was impossible to keep people off the dam because the main highway runs over the top of it.

Mr. President, in this connection I wish to say that one can hardly pick up a copy of any daily newspaper now without finding an article which refers to sabotage, or attempted sabotage, or espionage taking place all over the country. The pending measure is designed not only for the protection of the American Government and the American people at a time when we are not at war, but it is designed for the protection of the American people and the American Government in the future, if ever we were to become involved in war.

Shall we pass by lightly the matter of sabotage. I say no. I am one among those Members of the Senate who believe that we could not find anyone who could surpass J. Edgar Hoover as head of the Federal Bureau of Investigation in the Department of Justice. I think he is one of the most efficient men this Government has ever had in its employ, and I think we are fortunate in having Mr. Hoover at the head of the Federal Bureau of Investigation. Therefore I am ready and willing and eager to read everything that comes out of his Bureau, for I know that, whatever it may be, the statement is based upon facts.

I shall read a statement concerning the Federal Bureau of Investigation, as follows:

G-MEN GUARD 430 PLANTS

WASHINGTON.—The Federal Bureau of Investigation, acting at the request of Army and Navy intelligence services, has undertaken precautionary measures to protect 430 key plants working on national defense orders, it has been disclosed.

The protective measures were undertaken because of increased fears of sabotage and espionage.

Federal Bureau of Investigation officials reported that complaints of espionage, sabotage, and other infractions affecting national defense aggregated only 250 during the 1938 fiscal year—and 1,651 during the 1939 period. However, they are now pouring in at the rate of 214 daily, or about a total of 78,000 annually.

A special general intelligence division has been set up in the Federal Bureau of Investigation to handle the complaints. This body is compiling detailed records on individuals and groups engaged in subversive activities.

Through 10 special field offices established, G-men are inspecting plants, conferring with plant executives, and recommending steps to be taken, such as installing adequate guards and fire-fighting equipment.

Mr. President, I say that the time has arrived when we should take into consideration, first, the interests of the American people, and after their interests have been taken care of by protecting them through the passage of such a measure as that proposed by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], after we have by such legislation protected the American Government and protected the American people, then let us give consideration to the aliens who are here illegally and to the aliens who are here legally.

I ask why should we longer pamper aliens who are within our midst, who are engaged in espionage, engaged in sabotage, engaged in peddling narcotics, and engaged in other pernicious activities which would not be countenanced for a moment by any other country upon the face of the earth?

There is objection to the passage of the pending measure in its present form. An amendment to it has been offered by the able junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT]. The contention seems to be made that even though an alien admits, "Yes, I placed dynamite under that plant; I blew it up; I destroyed $100,000 worth of property and killed only 19 American citizens, and fortunately there were only two children in the lot," he ought not to be deported. The able Senator from Ohio would argue that we ought to take a chance with the lives of American citizens and with American property for fear we might injure the feelings of some alien criminal. Mr. President, I would rather take the chance of injuring the feelings of some alien criminal, who is here to destroy our Government, to kill our people, and to bring about destruction of our property, and who has been guilty of such offenses, I would rather take a chance of turning his face red than to take a chance on his again committing acts of sabotage. And any alien in this country who is crazy enough, who has no more sense than to admit doing that which he did not do, might by suggestion commit an act of sabotage.

Mr. President, we ought to cooperate with J. Edgar Hoover. We ought to cooperate with the fine enforcement officers of our country. It appalls me when I realize that up until this time we have not brought about the enactment of a law for the immediate deportation of alien criminals who are in the United States and who are costing the Government millions upon millions of dollars annually, even totaling into the billions. The cost of crime annually in this country, as revealed to us by the able former Attorney General of the United States, the Honorable Homer S. Cummings, amounts to $17,000,000,000. Alien criminals are responsible for a considerable portion of the crime bill. We should quit coddling and pampering criminal aliens in this country. If an alien comes into court and admits that he blew up a plant, or destroyed a railway trestle, or did some other damage to American property, or had been engaged in espionage, why should we put our taxpayers to the cost and put our officials to the trouble of a long-drawn-out trial, when as a matter of fact, by his own admission, he is engaged in sabotage?

As suggested by my colleague and friend from the great State of New Mexico [Mr. HATCH], if a wrong were done, the accused would have recourse through the instrumentality of habeas corpus proceeding, and the wrong would be righted. It certainly would be righted in our courts if the prisoner at the bar and the accused were an alien.

Mr. President, is anyone heard in this forum or in that of the other House yelling his lungs out in defense of American criminals? I have never heard anyone in this Chamber or that of the House rise in defense of the American criminal. I say the time has come when we of America who are interested in the protection and welfare of the American people should devote our time and attention to the defense of Americans, American property, and American government, and quit thinking so much about the poor alien criminal, who in many cases entered the United States illegally for the purpose of wrecking our property, destroying our Nation, and sowing the seeds of radicalism and communism.

Mr. President, I am for the bill as it is; and I hope the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] will ask for a record vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT].

Mr. AUSTIN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Davis	Hughes	Russell
Andrews	Donahey	Johnson, Calif.	Schwellenbach
Ashurst	Downey	Johnson, Colo.	Sheppard
Austin	Frazier	King	Shipstead
Bailey	Gerry	Lee	Smathers
Bankhead	Gibson	Lucas	Taft
Barbour	Gillette	Lundeen	Thomas, Okla.
Barkley	Glass	McCarran	Thomas, Utah
Bilbo	Green	McNary	Tobey
Borah	Guffey	Miller	Tydings
Brown	Gurney	Minton	Vandenberg
Bulow	Hale	Murray	Van Nuys
Byrd	Harrison	Neely	Walsh
Byrnes	Hatch	Nye	White
Capper	Hayden	Pittman	Wiley
Chandler	Herring	Radcliffe
Chavez	Holman	Reed
Danaher	Holt	Reynolds

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. DANAHER and Mr. RUSSELL addressed the Chair.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. DANAHER. Is the bill open to further amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands there is pending an amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL].

Mr. DANAHER. I did not know that it was pending. I thought the only amendment offered was that of the Senator from Ohio, and that the amendment of the Senator from Georgia would be offered later. Am I correct in that?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks the Senator from Connecticut is perhaps correct, and that the amendment of the Senator from Georgia was sent to the desk only for the purpose of being stated.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I stated at the time that I would ask that the amendment be acted upon immediately after action upon the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I am very willing to yield to the Senator from Georgia in order that he may proceed with his amendment as he contemplated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia is recognized.

Mr. RUSSELL. I ask that the amendment be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, lines 9 and 10, it is proposed to strike out "has admitted in writing that he has engaged in, or been convicted of," and insert "has been convicted of, or has admitted in writing that he has engaged in."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL].

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I accepted a modification which was suggested by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed modification will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 10, after the word "espionage", it is proposed to insert "as defined in the act of June 15, 1917 (40 Stat. 217)."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Georgia as now modified.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I wonder if the Senator would add the word "voluntarily" before the word "admitted" so as to read "voluntarily admitted"?

Mr. RUSSELL. I will be glad to accept that modification of the amendment. I do not believe officials of the Federal Government are going around with a blackjack and a rubber hose to beat people into confessing crimes of which they are not guilty. I will be glad to clarify the provision by accepting the modification of the amendment as proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia accepts the amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania as a modification of his amendment. The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from Georgia as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I sent forward to the desk an amendment which I should like to have stated. I will say that I have submitted it to the Senator from Georgia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, in lines 10 and 11, it is proposed to strike out the words "for a foreign government" and insert in lieu thereof "affecting the national defense or the foreign relations of the United States."

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I certainly have not the slightest objection to that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I have an amendment to offer with reference to the subject matter appearing on page 2 of the bill. I send it to the desk and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 1, it is proposed to strike out "at any time" and insert "within 5 years"; and, on page 2, to strike out lines 5 and 6.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, speaking briefly on the amendment as offered, let me first state that I feel we have made a serious mistake in accepting the amendment of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] and in voting down the amendment as offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT]. I feel that this bill should not further be complicated, or further vices in the terms of its legal application be added, by the inclusion of sections 2 and 3 in their present form.

Let me point out, if you please, that already on the calendar, bearing Calendar No. 1189, there is a bill (H. R. 5138) which has been reported by the Committee on the Judiciary, title III of which commences as follows:

SEC. 19. At any time within 5 years after entry, any alien who at the time of entry—

And so forth.

Mr. President, if we do not limit the application of this particular bill to aliens who commit the offense defined within 5 years after entry, we are making a brand-new departure from our settled law. Ever since 1917, when we first undertook to deal with this type of subject, the law has required that in order to render themselves subject to prosecution under it aliens must commit the particular offense or be guilty of an act involving moral turpitude within 5 years after their admission to this country.

If we leave this matter as it is at present, an infant who was brought here when 6, 7, or 8 months of age may commit some offense involving the Narcotics Act at the age of 16 or 17, or in later years, and thereafter be automatically deported under this bill to a country whose language, whose customs, and whose people are completely strange to him. It is a cruel and unusual purported punishment for the particular act as defined.

As the bill is drawn, it might even go further with reference to a violation of the narcotics law, if you please, of some Federal or State jurisdiction than it does with reference to acts involving moral turpitude. It goes further, if you like, than crimes of violence. In other words, if an alien today takes a gun and, with violence or threat to the life or limb of some American citizen, undertakes a hold-up, unless he do it within 5 years after his entry, he is not to be deportable; and yet, under the terms of this bill, we would automatically deport somebody who violates the Narcotics Act. It seems to me that a mere statement of the matter is sufficient to evaluate the injustice and the cruelty and the hardship incident upon the enforcement of the bill as it stands; and enforcement, of course, must automatically follow.

Let me further point out, with reference to section 3 of the bill as it now stands, that it provides that any alien who becomes a habitual user of narcotics and is confined in an institution is automatically deportable, regardless of when he came to this country.

Mr. President, certainly we cannot mean that. There must be persons in this body who know those who have been victims of cancer, if you choose, or some other terrible disease which has baffled all surgical skill and which has resulted in the increasing use of opiates in an effort to reach the pain, to the point that the person becomes a habitual user of narcotics, and perhaps may be institutionalized. Surely persons within this body know individuals who are in that position. To give this bill its full intentment, once any such person is institutionalized, we are going to make him automatically deportable to a country where he may know nobody, where his illness and his pain can mean nothing, where he has no attention, no relatives, not even command of the language necessary to describe his misfortune.

Mr. President, I submit that the Senate cannot mean and will not mean to inveigh against such persons. I ask that at the very least we canvass the whole subject.

The bill known as Calendar 1189, House bill 5138, has been reported out of the Judiciary Committee. It is a bill which has already passed the House. It is a bill which undertakes to deal with this general subject; and, as a matter of fact, it specifically provides for habitual users of narcotics, but within 5 years after the date of their arrival, so that we have some humane point at which we draw the line. I respectfully submit that that is exactly what we ought to undertake to do in our legislation.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President—

Mr. DANAHER. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. RUSSELL. Did the Senator from Connecticut object to House bill 5138 when it was reached upon the calendar a few minutes ago?

Mr. DANAHER. I did. I objected to it, and I will state right here and now that I believe I objected to three others. There are three others, as the Senator doubtless knows—House bill 5643, House bill 6724, and Senate bill 2830—all dealing more or less with the same general subject. I objected to them in the expectation and hope that we could correlate these things, that we could discuss all these subjects together. These are subjects of moment which ought seriously to be considered, not in their apparently dissociated incidence—as we are now, in my opinion, mistakenly considering this bill—but rather should they all be considered together; and in that thought I objected to all of them, that they might all come up together, or reasonably so.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, which one of the bills does the Senator from Connecticut favor?

Mr. DANAHER. I believe that if we declare a certain objective and strive for it, we can rely upon American institutions, through our courts, to impose conviction as a necessary condition precedent to deportation; that we can recodify, so to speak, our existing legislation under which deportations may follow; that we can properly within the limits of House bill 5138, for instance, write a good bill; and surely there are enough lawyers in this body to write a good bill. It has been suggested that there are too many lawyers here now. Mr. President, there are not enough of them if we are going to overlook the incidence of this type of legislation. It is to those who are not lawyers that I specifically address myself, hoping to call to their attention the iniquity and the vice in principle of this bill.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President—

Mr. DANAHER. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. RUSSELL. Do I gather, then, that the Senator from Connecticut is opposed to House bill 5138 as written?

Mr. DANAHER. I am opposed to it as written; yes. I believe, however, that we can redraft it.

Mr. RUSSELL. I was interested in the Senator's argument that because another bill on the calendar which the Senator opposes contains a similar provision which the Senator also opposes, unfavorable action should be taken on the provision of the pending bill. The Senator would seem to be opposed to it whether it is in this bill or in House bill 5138.

Mr. DANAHER. Of course, I am and have been confining my argument to the bill under discussion, and more particularly to the amendment which I have offered.

Mr. President, in order to make the pending bill at the very least consonant with existing law, I believe we ought to amend section 2 by striking out the indeterminate period governing deportation, and insert in lieu thereof "within 5 years," so that the date of entry begins to toll and consequently to affect the deportable status of any alien so to be convicted as a violator of the Narcotics Act. I also believe we could and should strike from the bill completely the section which would remove automatically, as deportable, aliens who are institutionalized because they have become addicts of narcotics.

I believe the amendment should prevail, and submit it to the Senate.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Connecticut a question.

Mr. DANAHER. I shall be happy to answer it, if possible.

Mr. FRAZIER. How long does the Senator from Connecticut think aliens should live here before they become citizens?

Mr. DANAHER. Of course, that matter is irrelevant to this particular inquiry; but unless an alien has the will to become an American citizen, and to assume the obligations of citizenship, I hope he will never become one.

Mr. FRAZIER. I should like to say that in a case of that kind I think he should be deported.

Mr. DANAHER. Perhaps the Senator is right about that, but I submit that that does not affect the pending amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER]. (Putting the question.) By the sound the noes appear to have it.

Mr. DANAHER. I ask for a division.

On a division, the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still before the Senate and open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. The bill was read the third time and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Calloway, one of its reading clerks, communicated to the Senate the intelligence of the death of Hon. EDWARD W. CURLEY, late a Representative from the State of New York, and transmitted the resolutions of the House thereon.

The message announced that the Speaker had appointed Mr. SULLIVAN, Mr. FITZPATRICK, Mr. BUCKLEY of New York, and Mr. BARTON a committee of the House to be joined with such Members of the Senate as may be appointed to attend the funeral of the deceased Representative.

TRIBUTES TO MEMORY OF MRS. EFFIE CANNING CARLTON

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, when benefactresses die—

There are no comets seen,

The heavens themselves blaze forth the death of princes.

In view of this astronomical dereliction, let the Senate note that yesterday, in the city of Boston, Mrs. Effie Canning Carlton, one of America's noblest and best-loved women, passed from the fitful land of the living into the silent land of the dead. Mrs. Carlton gave to the world something that is more valuable than the gold of Ophir and more estimable than the diamonds of Golconda. She contributed to humanity that sublime symphony of soothing melody Rock-A-Bye Baby on the Tree Top, with which millions of loved and loving mothers have for more than a half century habitually lulled their little ones to sleep. Let us hope that the immortal spirit of this famous woman is at this hour experiencing every joy of the celestial city that is paved with stars, and that she may blissfully dwell forever and forever in that happy realm of which the poet said:

They need not the moon in that land of delight,

They need not the pale, pale star,

For the sun is bright both by day and by night;

Where the souls of the blessed are.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, the lasting treasures of life frequently come from sources little known to us. How many are indebted to Mrs. Effie Canning Carlton, of Boston, who composed the melody of the world-famous lullaby Rock-A-Bye Baby? So many, in fact, that legion is their name and yet few of us have known her name.

Word comes that she has passed away in Boston's City Hospital in impoverished circumstances. Fortunately, however, her true worth was recognized because a room was provided for her by the American Society of Composers, Authors, and Publishers.

Mrs. Carlton composed the melody to the old Mother Goose rhyme at the age of 15, to lull to sleep the restless baby of a neighbor. Although the song brought great wealth to music publishers, Mrs. Carlton received but little from it. Her reward came in knowing that many thousands of mothers throughout the land have sung this beautiful lullaby to their babies. Walking through Boston Common, Mrs. Carlton could hear her song crooned in love as some mother rocked to sleep the baby in her arms. To all of us this woman of song has brought a priceless treasure.

TRADE AGREEMENTS PROGRAM—LETTER BY SECRETARY HULL

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the text of a letter written to the distinguished and able minority leader of the Senate from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] by the Secretary of State, Mr. Hull, on December 16 in regard to some phases of the trade-agreements program.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, of course I shall be delighted to have this piece of misinformation in the RECORD. I addressed to the Secretary of State a letter setting forth the true situation as disclosed by the figures affecting the depreciated currencies of the world. I think the letter addressed by me should accompany the Secretary's letter, if the Senator will withhold his request.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senator will provide me with a copy of his letter, I shall be glad to put the two in the RECORD together.

Mr. McNARY. Very well. That will make sense; but, in order to have the matters in chronological order, so that the reader may know what the Secretary is talking about, if possible, I desire to have the letter I wrote precede the letter of the Secretary. I have not a copy of my letter with me. Will not the Senator withhold the request until Wednesday?

Mr. BARKLEY. I will withhold my request, in order that the Senator's letter may enable those who read it to understand the Secretary's letter.

Mr. McNARY. I promise to have it in the hands of my colleague, the able Democratic leader, on Wednesday.

ORDER FOR ADJOURNMENT TO WEDNESDAY

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Wednesday next.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the request of the Senator from Kentucky is agreed to.

ASSISTANCE TO FINLAND

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I bespeak the indulgence of the Senate for just a few moments.

Not in a spirit of controversy, but rather with a desire to get more light on a subject which apparently is becoming very significant, I am posing these questions:

First. Under international law can the Congress of the United States loan or give money to Finland?

The applicable provisions of international law seem to be as follows:

Thirteenth Hague Convention, 1907:

ART. 6. The supply, in any manner, directly or indirectly, by a neutral power to a belligerent power, of warships, ammunition, or war material of any kind whatever, is forbidden.

Hague Air Rules of 1923:

ART. 44. The supply in any manner, directly or indirectly, by a neutral government to a belligerent power of aircraft, parts of aircraft, or material, supplies, or munitions required for aircraft is forbidden.

Convention on Maritime Neutrality, Havana, 1928:

ART. 15. Of the acts of assistance coming from the neutral states, and the acts of commerce on the part of individuals, only the first are contrary to neutrality.

ART. 16. The neutral State is forbidden:

(a) To deliver to the belligerent, directly or indirectly, or for any reason whatever, ships of war, munitions or any other war material;

(b) To grant it loans, or to open credits for it during the duration of the war.

International Law Association, 1928:

ART. 11. The supply, under any ground whatever, directly or indirectly, by a neutral power to a belligerent power of warships, ammunition, or war material of any kind is forbidden.

Second. Under our constitutional form of government, has the Congress any authority to make a loan of money or a gift to Finland?

The Constitution gives specific powers to the Congress. Besides these specific powers, there are certain implied powers. Certainly the power to loan or give money to another nation while we are at peace and that nation is at war is not conferred upon the Congress of the United States. Should we attempt to conform the Constitution to our sympathies and our emotions?

Third. Irrespective of international law or constitutional authority, would it be a wise course for the Congress to follow, when this Nation is at peace, to loan or make a gift of money to another nation that is at war? Would it not establish a new foreign policy? Would it not be pregnant with problems for the future if we were to loan money or make a gift of money to Finland at this time—and when I say “we,” I mean the Government as distinguished from individuals. Would the Government not be opening the door for pressure-group demands all down the highway of the future? Today Poland, dismembered and bleeding, has an army in the field in France. There are a great many more Polish people in this country and descendants thereof than there are Finns. The same applies to Czechoslovakia. China, too, has her friends. Would not demands be made for assistance to China, and perhaps for Sweden, Norway, Belgium, and Holland? Then, with the door open—France and England.

Fourth. If no action on the part of this Government, that is, action by Congress appropriating money for Finland, is taken, will that mean injury to the cause of that brave people? The answer to this fourth question will undoubtedly be found in the hearts of the American people. Mr. Hoover is doing noble work, but the American people must respond in such a way that immediately there will be made available such a sum of money as has been talked about as necessary for the Finns. There is quite a difference between action taken by individuals or groups of citizens and action taken by the Government. We here in Congress are trustees of the people's money—trustees with limited powers, because under our Constitution those powers not given to the Congress still belong to the people. It is absolutely up to us to guard not only the liberties of this people but so guard our actions that future generations will not find themselves hamstrung because of our acts. At this time, is it not well for us to realize the form and nature of the Government of which we are a part? Until the people change the fundamental law of the land, Congress can dispose of the people's money only for purposes defined and designated in that fundamental law—the Constitution. If, with reason and judgment, we pursue our course, and do not let emotionalism and hysteria deflect us from the course, we will keep America safe, and we will still find a way, through individuals and groups, to aid those who need succor and assistance. Through individuals and groups we can do that which will not involve America in a violation of international law. Let us once and for all settle this matter so that we will not have pressure groups or perhaps even foreign elements engineering a job on Uncle Sam. If we should do now what is talked of, namely, vote money to Finland, would we not find that next week there would be a group which would want the Government to raise millions of dollars for China, and other groups which would want millions of dollars raised for some of the European countries?

When we were at war, the situation was different. As a war measure, we aided our Allies. But we are not at war now, and if we keep our heads we will not get into war.

I believe that if the people of this country knew tomorrow that our Government would take no action, they would respond as individuals, and respond liberally, to aid Finland.

I am one of the very few Members of this body who have Scandinavian blood in their veins; but I am not a Scandinavian—I am an American; and in approaching this matter by asking these questions, I have my eyes not simply on the present but on the future. When Washington counseled against entangling alliances, did he not know that economic entanglements were as dangerous as political entanglements? Is not the issue as to Finland one for the American people to answer individually with American dollars? Should the American Nation officially commit an overt act in violation of international law and the Constitution?

If individual citizens, or citizen groups, desire to give, then let them give, but let us not open the door that will lead us into Europe again. Let us guard our neutrality. Let us see that there is no Government agency, such as the R. F. C. or the Export-Import Bank, to open the door to an indirect violation of international law and of the Constitution.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MINTON in the chair), as in executive session, laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE EDWARD W. CURLEY

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (H. Res. 341), as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, January 8, 1940.

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. EDWARD W. CURLEY, a Representative from the State of New York.

Resolved, That a committee of four Members of the House with such Members of the Senate as may be joined be appointed to attend the funeral.

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms of the House be authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary for carrying out the provision of these resolutions and that the necessary expenses in connection therewith be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect the House do now adjourn.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in the absence of the two Senators from New York, on their behalf I offer the resolution which I send to the desk.

The resolution (S. Res. 211) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. EDWARD W. CURLEY, late a Representative from the State of New York.

Resolved, That a committee of two Senators be appointed by the Vice President to join the committee appointed on the part of the House of Representatives to attend the funeral of the deceased Representative.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the resolution just adopted the Chair appoints the senior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] and the junior Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD] as the committee to represent the Senate at the funeral of the deceased Representative.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased Representative, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned, the adjournment being under the order previously entered, until Wednesday, January 10, 1940, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, JANUARY 8, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We are grateful, our Heavenly Father, that we still abide within the circle of the Lord of Life. We pray Thee to grant us the wisdom to fashion as we feel, to labor as we know, and bless us with the tranquil light of Thy truth. Just now we are reminded that on the earth the broken arc, in the heaven a perfect round. We rejoice that life is ever lord of death, and love can never lose its own. O Thou who art the center of our hopes and aspirations, be pleased to hear our Saviour's prayer as it falls from the lips of every dear heart: Our Father, who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name; Thy kingdom come; Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread, and forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us; and lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil; for Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, January 4, 1940, was read and approved.

RESIGNATION FROM COMMITTEE

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following resignation from committees, which was read by the Clerk:

JANUARY 8, 1940.

HON. WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD,
Speaker of the House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: Having been selected for membership on the Judiciary Committee, I hereby respectfully tender you my resignation from the other committees of which I am at present a member, to wit: Revision of Laws; Claims; Coinage, Weights, and Measures; and Census.

Faithfully yours,

ESTES KEFAUVER.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resignation will be accepted.

There was no objection.

THE LATE HONORABLE CHARLES NAGEL

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, Hon. Charles Nagel died Friday afternoon at his home in St. Louis at the age of 90 years. No movement that had for its purpose the betterment of his city, State, or Nation failed to receive his support.

During the administration of President Taft, Mr. Nagel was Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor. He did not seek the appointment and often stated it was the outstanding surprise of his life.

Born in Texas in 1849 the son of Dr. Herman Nagel, with his father, a Union sympathizer, he was forced to flee to Mexico during the Civil War. It was in 1864 father and son arrived in St. Louis and from that day to the date of his death that city has been Mr. Nagel's home. He was often referred to as St. Louis' first citizen, and the dean of the city's celebrities. In 1936 he received the distinguished service award for St. Louis because of his work in connection with united charities.

Mr. Nagel's contributions on public questions were always welcomed even among those who did not always agree with him. A staunch supporter of a free press, freedom of speech, freedom of religion, and the right of all citizens to assemble peacefully, his services on the lecture platform were freely given when the cause justified.

It was my pleasure to know Mr. Nagel since boyhood and likewise a pleasure for me to be able to call him my friend.

Mr. Speaker, as part of my remarks I include editorial tributes from the three St. Louis papers—the Post-Dispatch, Globe Democrat, and Star Times—which follow:

[From the St. Louis Post-Dispatch]

CHARLES NAGEL

There is a vacancy in the St. Louis scene where for so long stood the tall figure of Charles Nagel. His was a figure tall not only in physical stature but in the attainments of mind and heart that mark the truly great. Here was a statesman of the law, an earnest devotee of human liberty, a man of unshakably independent thought, a force for constructive action in city, State, and Nation.

The life of Mr. Nagel covered 90 years, an expanse of more than half his country's history, and he bore his four-score and ten with all the hardy vigor of a Roman elder. That, in fact, had been his role in the community in recent years: a revered and distinguished figure, always ready to draw upon his deep learning and experience for the public benefit, an active participant in everyday affairs. Almost until the end he could have used virtually the identical words spoken by Cicero at 84: "The senate-house does not miss my strength, nor the rostra, nor my friends, nor my clients, nor my guests."

It was not ambition that made Charles Nagel prominent in public life, but a sense of duty and an unselfish desire to serve the general welfare. Many more offices might have been his had he sought them, and had he observed the rigid metes of party regularity. But he had no taste for expediency; he would sacrifice no conviction for the sake of political approval. He served his chosen party well but always remained free to criticize and to split his ticket. Often he helped friends to office, but they were never his debtors; to favored judicial candidates he invariably said, "I must never be tendered any appointment at your hands."

Charles Nagel learned his democracy and his tolerance at first hand. His parents had left Germany in the forties to find in America the liberty denied by oppressors at home. As an impressionable boy, the son of union sympathizers in a Texas community, he was forced to flee with his father for personal safety. Convictions thus implanted doubtless inspired him to humanize enforcement of the immigration laws, his great work as Secretary of Commerce and Labor in the Taft Cabinet.

When the World War came closer to America, Mr. Nagel saw the perils it brought to democracy and unity. In those trying days he counseled strict loyalty to his fellows of German descent and warned the public at large against the hyphen hysteria of the day. He lived to see the senseless ban removed, and then to sorrow again for his spiritual brothers across the sea as Hitlerism, the negation of all that Charles Nagel believed, applied its brutal lash.

Mr. Nagel's range of interests and activities was as broad as his life was long. A stimulus to education, a patron of the arts, a friend of the underprivileged, he served the good causes which arose in the community. An advocate of business in his professional life, he saw the need for restraints on overreaching enterprise, and long sought Federal chartering of corporations as a means of establishing control.

In the passing of Charles Nagel, St. Louis loses its first citizen and the Nation a man who contributed valuably to its councils.

[From the St. Louis Globe-Democrat]

CHARLES NAGEL

It has been said, and truly so, that Charles Nagel was the "first citizen" of St. Louis. But what is most remarkable about this designation is that although he was a conspicuous citizen and a national figure for many years his greatest achievements as a civic inspiration were recorded in that period of his long life which followed the three score and ten when the average man might anticipate early retirement from an active life. Mr. Nagel lived to be 90. Until a few weeks before his lamented death, he was engaged at his tasks as a lawyer, his mind keen for professional service, his interest vigorous in the manifold problems confronting the city and its people. Tall, erect, and possessed of physical attractiveness, he was a commanding figure wherever he went.

On his passing it might be said, of course, that the city of his adoption has suffered a loss. He was the dean of the corps of counselors upon whom St. Louis might call for guidance and stimulation. A familiar voice in public affairs is now stilled. But he left a legacy which will not be soon forgotten. In his chosen profession, the law, he was outstanding. Since 1873 he practiced in this city. He served in the old city council. He was a member of the State legislature. He was a member from Missouri of the Republican National Committee and for many years was active in the party, locally and nationally. He served President Taft as Secretary of Commerce and Labor. Since 1892 he was a member of the corporation (board of trustees) of Washington University and for a time was the board's president. At the time of his death he was president of the Missouri Historical Society. In 1936 he was awarded the civic award as the St. Louisan who had done more for the civic good than any other in the preceding year. The $1,000 which accompanied the award he promptly contributed to the United Charities which he helped organize.

But this is bare enumeration of some of Mr. Nagel's formal contacts with city and national life. In less-familiar capacities he was a zealous exponent and defender of the best for civic welfare. In him was born a love of freedom. He never lost his zest as an advocate of freedom of speech, freedom of the press, and the right of free assembly. He was liberal without being radical. An ardent Republican, he was not always strictly bound by party lines, especially in city elections. Tragic for him were the World War days when the Germany of his ancestry became public enemy No. 1. He counseled then, as always, tolerance, which he believed was possible without surrendering one whit of loyalty to this country. He lived to see his sentiments justified by public opinion.

It was a rich field of human experience that was cultivated by Mr. Nagel over decades of public life that stretch back to post Civil War days. By the fruitful labors of many years he attained an eminence of affection in St. Louis which justly entitled him to be our "first citizen." His was a life of many years well spent.

[From the St. Louis Star-Times]

FIRST CITIZEN OF ST. LOUIS

Charles Nagel, noted attorney and civic leader who died yesterday, strode through his 90 years in a manner which made him recognized, for at least a generation, as the first citizen of this community.

His achievements were legion. From an humble beginning as the son of an immigrant, he climbed to the top in many fields. He became a distinguished teacher. He was an eminent lawyer. He held many public offices, including that of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor during the Taft administration.

Crowded though his life was, Charles Nagel found time for public welfare, civic needs, and charity. In 1936, at an age far beyond that when many men have gone into retirement, he received the St. Louis award for his "outstanding services to the city." His speeches at public gatherings in behalf of the underprivileged and the needy are memorable.

Mr. Nagel left upon those who came in contact with him the impression of a great and noble character. To people of humble station in life he was understanding and courteous. To young men and women he was a valued adviser. And to St. Louis as a whole he was an outstanding leader whose place will not soon be filled.

SWEARING IN OF MEMBER

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following communication from the Clerk of the House:

JANUARY 8, 1940.

The SPEAKER,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The certificate of election, in due form of law, of Hon. JOHN JENNINGS, Jr., as a Representative-elect to the Seventy-sixth Congress, from the Second Congressional District of Tennessee, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Hon. J. Will Taylor, is on file in this office.

Very truly yours,

SOUTH TRIMBLE,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

Mr. JENNINGS appeared in the Well of the House and took the oath of office.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. CROWE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, after the disposition of business on the Speaker's desk and the legislative program for the day, I be permitted to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

REFORESTATION

Mr. CROWE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CROWE. Mr. Speaker, this morning I addressed a letter to 91 Members of the House who have in their district forest areas suitable for reforestation in which I asked that they appear before the Subcommittee on Appropriations of which the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] is chairman. I am renewing that request at this time. I hope and urge all Members interested in the further purchase of forest areas to call on that subcommittee within the next day or two and press their views.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD the statement I made before the Committee on Appropriations this morning.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. BOLLES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday, at the conclusion of the legislative program for the day, I may address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and to include therein an editorial from the Saturday Evening Post.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

THE LATE HONORABLE OLIVER W. FREY

Mr. GERLACH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot entertain the gentleman's request. The Chair will recognize the gentleman for 1 minute if there be no objection.

There was no objection.

Mr. GERLACH. Mr. Speaker, I ask the privilege of paying tribute to a former Member of this body, a distinguished son of Pennsylvania, whose untimely death was a severe shock to his home city and State. I refer to the Honorable Oliver W. Frey, of Allentown, Pa., who departed this life on Saturday morning, August 26, 1939.

There is no mission more honorable than to be chosen by one's constituents to represent them in the National House of Representatives. The Congress of the United States is the most democratic and representative legislative body in the world and to be a Member of it is an honor that may well be coveted by every American.

To this high office Oliver Frey was elected three times by substantial majorities. His election in the first instance was to fill the unexpired term of the Honorable Henry Winfield Watson.

Mr. Frey represented the Bucks-Lehigh District in this body and was an esteemed and valued member of the Democratic Party in Pennsylvania. In the afternoon of the day he passed away he was scheduled to address a large political rally of the Democratic Party in Lehigh County, and his determination to keep this engagement may have hastened his death many of his friends believe.

By education and experience Oliver Frey was particularly well equipped for congressional service. After leaving high school he entered William and Mary College, from which he graduated with an A. B. degree in 1915. Following his graduation from William and Mary he matriculated at the University of Pennsylvania Law School and received his bachelor of laws degree from that institution in 1920. It was while he was attending law school that the United States entered the World War, and Oliver Frey, patriotically interrupting his studies, was among the first to enlist. He was commissioned a second lieutenant of Infantry on August 15, 1917. Later he was promoted to first lieutenant and also served as acting battalion adjutant. During the greater part of his enlistment he was overseas with the famous Seventy-ninth Division and participated in front-line action in the Avocourt and Troyon defensive sectors and the Meuse-Argonne offensive. On July 2, 1919, he was honorably discharged at Camp Dix, N. J., and resumed the study of law.

Upon graduation from law school he began at once the practice of his chosen profession. Possessed of a keen analytical mind, together with unlimited energy and close application to work, he soon gained a foothold in a rather crowded profession, and ere long was recognized as one of the outstanding members of the Lehigh County bar. His ability and integrity at the bar commanded the regard and esteem of his fellow barristers, and his friends and neighbors loved and respected him for his manly qualities and happy disposition. It is no exaggeration to say that his friends were legion and that one of his greatest virtues was his capacity for making and keeping friends.

With respect to his official duties he was untiring in his efforts to help those whom he was elected to serve. He discharged his congressional duties impartially and with a personal interest that made him beloved by all with whom he came in contact. They recognized in Mr. Frey all those cardinal virtues that make for good citizenship, honesty, loyalty, and sincerity, coupled with a fine mind and a charming personality, and when he answered the last roll call they knew they had lost a true friend and the district a worthy public servant. In fact, the passing of such able and distinguished public men is not only an irreparable loss to their neighbors, friends and constituents but to the Nation as well. Their achievements, however, are the source of much inspiration to us and to future generations. What better record can a man leave than that of the full performance of duty? Such a record denotes not only marked ability but undaunted courage and a high sense of honor. To men of this caliber the Nation is indebted for their tireless energy and devoted service; and to Oliver Frey, soldier, lawyer, statesman, friend, I pay this humble but sincere tribute, fully recognizing that the unblemished record of his private life and public service will ever be his proudest monument.

Thy day has come, not gone;
Thy sun has risen, not set;
Thy life is now beyond
The reach of death or change,
Not ended—but begun.
O noble soul! O gentle heart! Hail and farewell.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a speech made by myself some time ago.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ON THE CIVIL SERVICE

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Civil Service be discharged from consideration of the bill (S. 1618) granting an annuity to William F. Pack, and that the bill be rereferred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial from the Christian Science Monitor, a statement by myself, a statement by the Civil Service Commissioners, and a statement by Mr. Burlew, First Assistant Secretary of the Interior.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HARRINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and to include therein an editorial from the magazine Fortune.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address I delivered to the Indianapolis Press Club on December 27.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include speeches delivered by the Right Honorable Alfred Duff Cooper and the Honorable Frank Murphy, Attorney General of the United States, at the National Conference for Palestine, at the Mayflower Hotel, city of Washington, January 17, 1940.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. MICHAEL J. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address delivered by Attorney General Murphy in Washington yesterday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

THE LATE MILTON W. SHREVE

Mr. RODGERS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RODGERS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. RODGERS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, it is with a sense of sadness that I arise to announce the passing away of a close personal friend and a Member of this House from my own district for a period of 16 years, the late Honorable Milton W. Shreve, of Erie, Pa., whose death occurred December 23, 1939.

On December 16, 1939, he suffered a cerebral hemorrhage, and death resulted just 1 week later.

Mr. Shreve was born in Venango County, Pa., May 3, 1858, the son of Rev. and Mrs. Cyrus Shreve, his father being a Baptist minister. After graduating from Bucknell University at Lewisburg, Pa., in the class of 1884, he took up the practice of law, was elected district attorney of Erie County in 1899, and later elected as representative in the Pennsylvania Legislature for three terms, namely, 1907, 1909, 1911, serving a part of the last term as speaker of the house.

Mr. Shreve was elected to Congress in 1913 and served one term. Was reelected in 1919 and served seven consecutive terms. He was a member of the Appropriations Committee and for a time chairman of the subcommittee having charge of appropriations to the Departments of State, Justice, Commerce, and Labor.

He was active in civic and fraternal affairs in his community as well as affairs political. He was a 32° Scottish-rite Mason, past commander of Mount Olivet Commandery, Knights Templar, and a past potentate of Zem Zem Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S. His career in public and civil life attests the esteem and confidence in which he was held by those who knew him best.

His religious profession was that of Presbyterian, being a member of the Church of the Covenant at Erie, Pa., where funeral services were conducted by his pastor on December 26, 1939.

Mr. Shreve's wife, Mary Hill Shreve, preceded him in death about 3 years ago. Their two children survive, Lyman C. Shreve, a prominent lawyer of Erie, Pa., and Mrs. E. B. Hulbey, of South Pasadena, Calif., who, with a host of other relatives and friends, mourn his passing.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein figures relative to the importation of agricultural products.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include in connection therewith an article from the Minnesota Stabilization Council regarding an amendment to the Federal Old Age Pension Act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ALEXANDER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on two subjects, and in connection with the latter, the Supreme Court appointments, to include an editorial from a California paper.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDERSON of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial from yesterday's New York Times.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. ANDERSON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. BENDER asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. GRANT of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address delivered before the American Petroleum Institute by Paul G. Hoffman, president of the Studebaker Corporation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GRANT]?

There was no objection.

MEMBERS OF UNITED STATES TERRITORIAL EXPANSION MEMORIAL COMMISSION

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the provisions of Public Resolution 32, Seventy-third Congress, the Chair appoints as members of the United States Territorial Expansion Memorial Commission the following Members of the House: Mr. KELLER, Mr. MOUTON, and Mr. WINTER.

MEMBERS OF THE BOARD OF VISITORS OF THE COAST GUARD ACADEMY

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the provisions of Public Law 183, Seventy-sixth Congress, the Chair appoints as members of the Board of Visitors to the Coast Guard Academy the following Members of the House: Mr. LUDLOW and Mr. TABER.

COMMITTEE ON MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the chairman of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, which was read:

JANUARY 5, 1940.

HON. WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD,

Speaker, House of Representatives,

Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: Pursuant to the act of April 16, 1937, as amended (Public, No. 38, 75th Cong., 1st sess.) I have appointed the following members of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries to serve as members of the Board of Visitors to the United States Coast Guard Academy for the calendar year of 1940: Hon. LINDSAY C. WARREN, Hon. EUGENE B. CROWE, Hon. FRANCIS D. CULKIN.

As chairman of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, I am authorized to serve as ex officio member of the Board.

Yours very truly,

S. O. BLAND, Chairman.

ANTILYNCHING BILL

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. GAVAGAN].

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I call up No. 1 on the Calendar of Motions to Discharge Committees, being motion No. 10, to discharge the Committee on Rules from consideration of House Resolution 103.

The Clerk read the title.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules, the gentleman from New York [Mr. GAVAGAN] is entitled to 10 minutes.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I have agreed to yield 5 minutes of my 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

The SPEAKER. May the Chair inquire who is expected to control the time in opposition?

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes of my 10 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX], a member of the Rules Committee, and 5 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I now yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY].

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, today is Jackson Day, I believe it a most appropriate day to discuss this important resolution. Andrew Jackson was a courageous and fearless man. Let us be equally courageous in our action on the pending resolution. Before this day is over we Democrats will all be seated around the same festive board—some of us representing the North and some representing the South. We will be cheering and praising the name of that great stalwart of our party, Andrew Jackson. It would be well to consider the pending business in this same feeling of good fellowship and brotherhood. Unfortunately, in the past the debate on this matter resulted in considerable bitterness—sharp and unpleasant language. This proposal deserves to be considered in a most calm, friendly, and dispassionate manner. [Applause.]

On January 3, more than 1 year ago, H. R. 801, known as the antilynching bill, was introduced by the gentleman from New York [Mr. GAVAGAN] and referred to the House Committee on the Judiciary. As the Judiciary Committee failed to take action, a petition to discharge the committee from further consideration of the bill was placed on the Speaker's desk and was promptly signed by 218 Members of this House. The rules of the House allow but 20 minutes of debate on the resolution which will make the antilynching bill the special order of business. It is most important that every Member remain in the Chamber and vote on this issue because it is here only as a result of the persistent efforts of our colleague, the gentleman from New York [Mr. GAVAGAN]. His interest in persecuted minorities has won for him the love and affection of not only the people of the colored race but of every other helpless group, regardless of race or creed, around whom he would securely place the protecting arm of justice. In my opinion, his untiring efforts throughout the years as a member of the Legislature of the State of New York and as a Member of the Congress of the United States on behalf of the underprivileged and forgotten man establishes the gentleman from New York [Mr. GAVAGAN] as a great liberal and a staunch defender of democracy. [Applause.]

The hope of mankind lies in democracy—and mankind hopes democracy will survive. Democracy proceeds only from tolerance. When mankind realizes all men are brothers—because they are sons of God—mankind will treat all men as brothers. Then will we have tolerance—then only will we have democracy.

Democracy was born in the New World and it was carried by the wind and the waves to the Old World. Great southerners, such as Washington and Jefferson, joined with great northerners, such as Ethan Allen and Adams, in enforcing tolerance and democracy by driving violators of these principles from our shores. The success of their new governmental philosophy inspired the progressive thinkers of Europe to import democracy from America.

Today, Europe looks to us again. We preach democracy; shall we practice it? That question will be answered by the votes on this bill. We condemn oppression abroad; shall we sanction it here?

There is nothing of sectional import about this bill. It simply implements our democracy to protect minorities against mob law wherever it may break out.

The introducer, the gentleman from New York, Representative JOSEPH A. GAVAGAN, is a stalwart, intelligent son of New York, that same New York whose history is linked in so many ways with the spirit of the Southland. In the dark days of the South, after the Civil War, men of New York, who occupied the seats now held in the House by the gentleman from New York [Mr. GAVAGAN] and the others in the New York delegation, rose to the defense of the South and helped it drive out the oppressors.

New York, large, active, seething, has always had time for charity. New York, a city of aggressive competition, has never ignored tolerance. New York, the home of men of all origins and from all places, knows that men of all kinds can live together in peace and understanding.

It is of the nature of New York, that we, its Representatives in the Congress, support this bill. We love with an intensity our democracy. We see in the huddled, forlorn figure of a human body hanging from a tree a mocking question mark on the American scene.

In the early days of the Great West of the United States, when cattlemen and miners were scattered over a huge wild country where policemen and courts were unknown, there were two famous characters who helped to maintain order—"Colonel Colt" and "Judge Lynch." Colonel Colt was the revolver that every man carried for his protection, and Judge Lynch was the rope that was used surely and swiftly to hang those who broke the written or unwritten law of the frontier.

The word "lynch" is said to come from the name of Charles Lynch, an American planter who, during the Revolutionary War, illegally inflicted punishments on Tories.

Lynching, which means the summary punishment of suspected criminals by private individuals and without a regular trial, was almost a necessity in those days, for effective Government organization for the punishment of "bad men" had not caught up with the spread of population. Vigilance committees of citizens, called "vigilantes," enforced the law in the early western gold fields. Lynching is no longer justified. Today it is usually the work of emotionally aroused groups seeking vengeance for some exceptionally savage crime that should and would be punished by the courts. Negroes have been the chief victims of these lawless outbreaks, and in most cases it has proved almost impossible to convict persons who have taken part in these outrages. The Federal Government is powerless to act, because the administration of criminal law is entirely in the hands of the various States. During the World War, President Wilson issued a statement earnestly protesting against such outbursts of lawlessness, saying:

There have been many lynchings, and every one of them has been a blow at the heart of ordered law and human justice. No man who loves America, no man who really cares for her fame and honor and character, or who is truly loyal to her institutions, can justify mob action while the courts of justice are open and the governments of the States and Nation are ready and able to do their duty. I say plainly that every American who takes part in the action of a mob or gives it any sort of countenance is no true man of this great democracy but its betrayer.

The best remedy for lynch law has been discovered to be prompt action by the courts in serious criminal cases and a speedy execution of the sentence imposed on the guilty.

A community outraged at crime need no longer be impatient at the pedestrian pace of the law. Today, with a Nation warring on crime, the law is swift and certain, and no guilty man can escape. There are no frontiers without order and efficient enforcement agencies. The only gap in our scheme is a lack of an antilynching statute. This we hope to cure by the Gavagan bill. Pass it and lynching, the crime against democracy and tolerance, will be "gone with the wind." [Applause.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, the question upon which you will be called presently to vote will be: Shall the Rules Committee be discharged? I believe it is pretty well understood by the Members of the House that the Rules Committee cannot intelligently proceed or fix the parliamentary procedure as to any proposed legislation until such legislation is in some manner before the committee. This bill has never been before the Rules Committee. The only thing before our committee is a little, short resolution purporting to fix the parliamentary status of a bill actually in the Committee on the Judiciary. It seems to me very unfair to one of the committees of this House to bring us down here and discharge us by a vote of the House from the consideration of a measure we have actually never had an opportunity to consider. However, we are the servant of the House, and you have the power and will soon have the opportunity to adopt that kind of procedure, if you wish to do so.

One thing more: This bill refers for its constitutional basis to the fourteenth amendment, and that, as everyone knows, has always been a field of high controversy as to constitutional questions. Here you have a bill that undoubtedly undertakes to invade the sovereign right of the State to maintain law and order within its own boundaries. No fair-minded man can read it and consider the simple language of the Constitution without being convinced that there is at least a serious constitutional question involved in this proposed legislation; yet we are called upon to proceed without even the advice of our able and distinguished Committee on the Judiciary.

Those of us who speak in opposition to this bill do not advocate lynchings. We stand together, I think, for the enforcement of law and order. This problem, as all well-informed people who will be candid about it must admit, is rapidly solving itself in the right way. Enlightenment, education, is removing the cause of lynchings.

It seems to me peculiarly unfortunate and singularly unwise that in the face of a record of such fine improvement the House of Representatives should be called upon in the very first days of the session to deal with this almost age-old problem. It always engenders bad feeling, ill will, and discord. I maintain that the States have the right under the Constitution to handle this problem; that they are handling it; and that the problem is being rapidly solved in a way that has excited the admiration of thoughtful students of conditions that have and do exist.

Democracy may be on trial. The distinguished gentleman who preceded me made some reference to that. It is anomalous that upon the convening of this important session of Congress, with not only Nation-wide but world-wide problems to be dealt with, we should come here with this slipshod procedure, without even the advice of our own lawyers as to the constitutionality of the measure, and set up a thing like this to receive the first consideration of this Congress and the country at large. [Applause.]

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, let me say in answer to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CLARK] that we are considering this proposed legislation in accordance with the orderly procedure, parliamentary law, and the rules of the House of Representatives. I make this statement as a member of the Committee on Rules. There is nothing out of the ordinary to bring up for consideration this bill by a motion signed by 218 Members.

I rise to support the motion to discharge the Committee on Rules from further consideration of the antilynching bill. This motion to discharge was signed by 98 Democrats and 117 Republicans, one member of the American Labor Party, and two Progressives. The bill of the gentleman from New York [Mr. GAVAGAN] is identical with the bill I introduced practically at the same time. I assume on the final passage there will be more Republican votes for it than there will be Democratic votes.

I approach this question with malice toward none and charity and friendship toward all. I recognize that there are in the Southern States just as many sincere and able advocates of the Constitution, interpreters and expounders of the Constitution, as in other parts of the Nation. There is no reason to impugn the motives of any Members of the House or indulge in invectives or vilification or personal abuse. This is a matter of dealing with or reflecting a sectional point of view, with those in the South largely on one side and those of the North and the West largely upon the other.

Every time a colored man or woman is lynched or burned at the stake in America it means that the Emancipation Proclamation has been suspended and that their civil and equal rights have been destroyed under the law and the Constitution. I have few colored people in my own district, but I would be derelict to those colored soldiers who served under my command and who paid the supreme sacrifice on the battlefields of France fighting to make the world safe for democracy if I did not raise my voice and do everything in my power to help pass a Federal antilynching bill in order to make America safe for their own people, their families, and sons. [Applause.]

The primary and paramount duty of Congress is to legislate to safeguard the security and lives of the American people and that is the reason for the existence of our government. I have taken an oath of office to support and defend the Constitution, and believe I am defending it when I am trying to protect human lives in America, whether they are white or whether they are colored.

There are still some American ostriches who refuse to recognize the constitutional rights of 13,000,000 free colored Americans, or one-tenth of our entire population, to equal protection and the due process provisions of the fourteenth amendment. There is a definite guaranty in the Federal Constitution that no American, whether he be colored or white, shall be deprived of his life or liberty without a trial by jury or due process of law, and naturally the Congress has the power to enforce such a mandate.

President Roosevelt spoke to Congress on the state of the Nation and of the world, and particularly of conditions in Europe, but failed to mention making democracy work at home by enacting a Federal antilynching law. President Roosevelt does not hesitate to express his views and pass moral judgments on European nations, but why is he so strangely silent on legislation aimed to provide for the security and safety of the lives of our own people?

I agree with the President, when he quotes the preamble to the Constitution and says our best defense is the promotion of our general welfare and domestic tranquillity. Maintaining those views, I ask President Roosevelt to state at the Jackson Day dinner tonight where he stands on the anti-lynching bill and what he proposes to do to secure its passage in the Congress and help in establishing justice and domestic tranquility in our own country.

A nation that does not protect its own citizens is not worthy of the name. A nation that sits supinely by and permits its own citizens to be destroyed by mob violence is in no position to protest racial injustices and persecution in foreign lands.

I again ask President Roosevelt to help make effective in behalf of 13,000,000 loyal colored people the fine words he uttered to Congress:

We must as a united people, keep ablaze on this continent the flames of human liberty, of reason, of democracy, and of fair play as living things to be preserved for the better world that is to come.

That is precisely what the colored people in America are asking for—human liberty, reason, democracy, justice, and fair play. [Applause.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remaining time to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX].

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, following the Civil War, while the South lay prostrate with the heel of the soldier upon her neck, Thaddeus Stevens, describing the program which he proposed to impose upon the South said:

Every government is a despotism. * * * The Constitution has nothing to do with it. (The program that he proposed). * * * I propose to deal with you entirely by the laws of war * * * conquered people have no right to appeal to the courts to test the constitutionality of law. * * * The Constitution has nothing to do with them or they with it.

When Thaddeus Stevens said that, he sank, in my opinion, to the uttermost depths to which the arrogance of power may drag men, yet he never sought to do a meaner thing to the South than it is proposed to do in this bill; he never sought to outrage, to injure, or to humiliate the South more than those who urge the enactment of this bill would outrage, injure, and humiliate it, for this measure has in it all the hypocrisy of the villain who daubs his vice with a show of virtue. If this bill were the proposal merely of an ignoramus filled with pride, vanity, and annoyance, "unknowing what he seeks," it might be dismissed as a grotesque absurdity. But, unfortunately, it is no such thing. It is the perfidious and evil product of a mixed group which, under the guise of "due process," and in the name of "equal protection of the law," seeks to use the powers of this great Government to humiliate, infuriate, and manhandle a people who are earnestly doing their best to find the solution of problems which beset them.

This bill, Mr. Speaker, is the expression of hostility—a senseless, venomous, ignorant, unreasoning hostility—that has existed in some quarters against the South for almost a century. At the present moment it represents the combined will and scheming of a radical Negro group that preaches natural rights and social equality; the leftist who wants to remake America into a despotism like that of Stalinist Russia; the Communist who seeks revolution as his opportunity for the spreading of his Godless and filthy doctrines, and who finds the Negro a willing tool in his effort to wreck and ruin society as it is constituted today; the simple idealist who is willing to try anything because he honestly believes that it will work for the social and economic betterment of the colored race; the so-called centralist, who believes in the concentration of power at Washington and the wiping out of every vestige of State sovereignty; those who would eradicate local self-government and nationalize our people and their activities; and more, perhaps, than any of these, the ruthless and self-seeking politician who would be perfectly willing to outrage the virtue of southern womanhood and to mongrelize a great part of his own nation as the price of securing for his own selfish and nefarious purposes the Negro vote.

These, Mr. Speaker, compose in essence the group that conjured up this iniquitous measure and that has kept the agitation for it alive through all these years, because each class of them hoped by its enactment to vitalize their own selfish or mistaken plans.

This bill is full of venom toward an already overabused and overpersecuted people. It was conceived and proposed with a reckless disregard for the effect it would have upon those it purports to protect. It is an effort on the part of the most of our northern Democratic and Republican brethren to do to the Southland that which a Republican Party, rendered drunk by power and under the control of irresponsible fanatics, sought to do with Federal bayonets during the years of chaos and reconstruction that followed the Civil War.

Mr. Speaker, the South is sick and tired of being treated as a conquered province, and if the party which it has cradled and nurtured and supported all these years permits itself to be used as the instrument for its complete undoing, then you may depend upon its people finding some other means of protecting themselves. And let me remind you that the Democratic Party is in control of this Congress, and that if this bill becomes law, the Democratic Party must take the responsibility for it.

We in the South have lived with the Negro in our midst as a part of our economic and social structure for more than 300 years. The relations that exist between us are good and should not be disturbed. It does not seem possible for the people of the North to know, let alone to feel, the sense of affection and responsibility and care for the Negro that we in the South feel for him in his proper place and in his proper activities.

Mr. Speaker, so far as lynchings are concerned, every Member of this Congress knows that that problem practically is solved in the South. Lynchings never have been the result of any innate, insatiable blood lust on the part of our people. In every case in which a lynching occurred it was necessarily preceded by some outrage. The rapid decline in the number of lynchings in the South does not represent a change of attitude on the part of the whites toward the crimes for which most lynchings occur nor is it to be taken as a relaxation of resistance to the efforts to force race mixture as is in part intended by this bill. It is due largely to the improved conduct of the southern Negro. He has ceased largely to violate the persons of white women and white girls, and as soon as he ceased that he no longer faced the menace of the rope or the bullet at the hands of infuriated people.

It is too thoroughly established as a philosophical fact to require reiteration here that you cannot legislate morals into a people. Morals are a matter of motive and motive is not a matter of legislation; it is a matter of education.

The Negro has his perfectly proper place in the South, just as he has his perfectly proper economic function in the South; and so long as he occupies that place and performs that function he will be treated better there than he is treated in the North, where he can starve to death within the shadow of this Capitol without exciting the tears and the cries of those who would go far South to find objects for their pity. Statistics show that a greater percentage of the Negroes in the South own their homes and farms and other property, that a smaller percentage of them is in prison, and that their crime record is much better than that of the Negroes of the North.

I might remind this House that in other days in the North when individuals or groups undertook to flaunt the law and all the tenets of civilization, and were effectively dealt with by law-abiding citizens, those citizens were not called lynchers. They were called vigilantes, and their memory is revered, their actions in shooting down or stringing up desperadoes are commemorated through the West today by plaques and tablets, and their descendants feel that they are honored because their fathers were numbered among these vigilantes who had the courage to uphold law and order and decency and morality.

But let the same thing happen in the South under the same circumstances and for the same reasons and immediately somebody wants to propose a law against it. Let me remind you, Mr. Speaker, that before the Civil War lynchings of Negroes were unknown; the necessity for this sort of drastic treatment of individuals here and there grew out of the conditions created by the carpetbag rule of northerners who refused to permit native southern whites to participate in the administration of public law.

I do not want to be misunderstood. I deplore lynching as much as any individual in this Nation. Also I deplore the conditions that give rise to lynching as much, and perhaps more, than many others in this Nation. I deplore them the more because I have lived with them. I have seen these conditions arise. The Negro maintaining his proper relationship and performing his rightful functions in the South is assured of a respect and affection that he does not get in the North. Where in the North could any slave child, traded for a horse, have risen to that high position of respect, honor, and affection reached by the eminent scientist, George Washington Carver, who but recently passed on to his reward? The esteem or disesteem in which the Negro is held in the South is not a matter of the color of his skin. It is the question of the kind of character that he has as an individual.

There is no community in the South to which you could go in which you would not find the vast majority of Negro citizens getting along well with their white neighbors, free to accumulate property, free to pursue life, liberty, and happiness, free to pursue an education, free to lift themselves to the greatest heights to which they individually may be capable. Here and there among the Negroes of the South, as among the Negroes of the North, as among the whites of the South and the whites of the North, we find an individual who has no regard for the law, who has no regard for his fellow man, who responds only to the influence of force.

To make a law that can be used to disrupt the social and economic structure of the South simply because here and there an individual renders himself so obnoxious as to require attention is grotesque beyond words, and this proposed act is not conceived in unselfish regard for the Negroes of the South; it is not proposed in the interest of either the white people or the Negroes of the South; it will not operate to the benefit of either the Negroes or the white people of the South; it is a miserably sorry bargaining away of the respect and the integrity of the South for the Negro votes of the North. It is the Harlem district of New York exercising more influence with the party in power than the whole white South.

Though the South possesses a vast percentage of the Nation's natural resources—a third of the land area and the population of the country, yet it owns less than 2½ percent of the total wealth of the Nation, and enjoys but a fraction of the annual national income. Unable though it has been to protect itself against economic exploitation, it has been able to preserve its civilization, and it will protect itself against the deeper purpose of this bill which is the mongrelization of its people.

My colleagues, you might just as well face the fact, and I thank God that it is a fact, that the Federal Government has not the power that can be misused to break down the color line in the South. Revile and abuse my people as you may, it must be said of them that they have done that which no other people under similar circumstances have been able to do in 60 centuries of history. They have made the color line the most important of all national policies, and in so doing, they have kept this Nation white.

Let us examine the bill briefly, Mr. Speaker, and see just what it is.

The first section of the bill declares that it is enacted—in exercise of the power of Congress to enforce by appropriate legislation the provisions of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and for the purpose of better assuring by the several States under said amendment equal protection and due process of law to all persons charged with or suspected or convicted of any offense within their jurisdiction.

The fourteenth amendment to the Constitution, after declaring all persons born or naturalized in the United States to be citizens thereof and of the States wherein they reside, reads:

No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the law.

Under the language of the bill the Federal Government sets up an overlordship over States and pledges itself to the use of compulsion against States. It is nothing less than the taking away from the people of the States their own government and using it in a manner satisfactory to the Congress, the same as was done in the South during the bitter and tragic years of reconstruction.

Section 2 of the bill defines a mob as—

Any assemblage of three or more persons which exercises or attempts to exercise by physical violence and without authority of law any power of correction or punishment over any citizen or citizens or other person or persons in the custody of any peace officer or suspected of, charged with, or convicted of, the commission of any offense, with the purpose or consequence of preventing the apprehension or trial or punishment by law of such citizen or citizens, person or persons.

It provides that—

Any such violence by a mob which results in the death or maiming of the victim or victims thereof shall constitute "lynching."

This means that if the father and brothers—three kinsmen or friends of a girl whose body had been violated by a fiendish brute—were in the exercise or attempt to exercise any power of correction or punishment to lay their hands in violence upon the culprit with the purpose or consequence of preventing trial or punishment by law they would immediately become mobsters, and if such action of such persons should result in the death or the maiming of the victim they would become lynchers.

Section 3 of the bill states that—

Whenever a lynching occurs, any officer or employee of a State or any governmental subdivision thereof who is charged with the duty or possesses the authority to protect such person or persons from lynching, and neglects or refuses to make all diligent effort to protect such person or persons from lynching, or who has custody of the person or persons lynched and neglects or refuses to make all diligent effort to protect such person or persons from lynching, or who is charged with the duty or possesses the authority to apprehend, keep in custody, or prosecute the members or any member of the lynching mob and neglects or refuses to make diligent effort so to do, shall be guilty of a felony and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding 5 years, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

This means that officers of a State, from Governor down, whose duty it is or who have the authority to protect a person from lynching and who neglect or refuse to make all diligent effort so to do, or any officer who has custody of the person lynched and neglects or refuses to make all diligent effort to protect him or fails to apprehend, keep in custody, and prosecute members of the mob, shall be guilty of a felony and shall be subjected to a fine not exceeding $5,000 or imprisonment not exceeding 5 years, or by both fine and imprisonment.

Under this language, if a Governor, sheriff, constable, town marshal, or any other officer whose duty it is or who has the authority to do any of the things enumerated were, in the opinion of some bureaucrat in Washington responsive to any of the groups hostile to the South supporting this proposed act, to fail to exercise all diligence, then they would become subject to the penalty and punishment provided.

What is meant by "all diligence"? Does it mean, in the case of a Governor, that he shall put aside all other State business and devote all of his time and exert all of the police powers of the State to the defense of one charged with crime? Would the term "all diligence" be satisfied by anything less than the full and complete exercise of all power? Would the Governor be exerting all diligence if he should fail to call out the whole of the National Guard and to summon every police officer of the State? In the case of a sheriff, does "all diligence" mean that he would be compelled to give all his attention to the protection of his prisoner; and, if so, for how long? If he deputized but a part of the male citizenry of the county, would this satisfy the law? In the defense of a prisoner against a mob, does "all diligence" mean that the sheriff shall kill; and, if so, how long and how many must he kill before it can be said that he has exercised all diligence and exerted all power in the effort to prevent a lynching; and does "all diligence" mean, as applied to the Governor, sheriff, constable, and all others, that they shall exert all of the powers at their command at one and the same time?

This language of the bill places peace officers of a State and all others whose duty it is or who have the authority to protect a person charged with crime against violence at the complete mercy of the Federal Government, which means at the mercy of those same influences which are forcing a politically minded Congress to adopt the bill.

Let me give you an illustration: Take my State—suppose a crime should be committed in Mitchell County, 200 miles removed from Atlanta, the seat of the State government, and say that the Governor should fail to call out the National Guard, or the sheriff of the county should fail to deputize all citizens of the county to protect the perpetrator of the crime, and say that a lynching should follow; the Governor and the sheriff would be subject to prosecution, fine, and imprisonment, provided in the opinion of some bureaucrat in Washington there should have been failure on the part of either to exercise all diligence. What is diligence? What constitutes all diligence? It is whatever the Federal bureaucrat says it is, and this bureaucrat will say whatever is necessary to satisfy the influences back of this bill. It subjects all peace officers to the will of organized Negro groups in the North, who, having the political power to force the adoption of this bill, will have the power to exert at least an attempt at enforcement.

Clause 1 of section 5 provides that all subdivisions of a State—that is, a county, parish, or municipality—shall be civilly liable for any lynching occurring within their jurisdiction or which follows upon the seizure and abduction of the victim by a mob within its territorial jurisdiction, and shall pay to the injured party or to his or her next of kin, if such injury results in death, a sum not less than $2,000 and not more than $10,000.

Thus it is seen that the people of a town, city, or county, wholly innocent of wrongdoing, may be compelled to reward a rapist or the family of a rapist for a crime of which they had no knowledge and to prevent which they had no opportunity. If, under the bill, a mob made up in one county takes its victim into an adjoining county and lynches him, the county, parish, or city from which he was taken, as well as the county, parish, or city in which lynching takes place could be compelled to pay up to $10,000 to the party lynched, or the mob might take their victim across the State line with the same result, or a mob made up in one county might seize their victim in some other county, with the result that the county where the victim was seized could be compelled to pay. So a county in which a lynching occurs, or the county from which the person lynched was taken, is required to pay from $2,000 to $10,000 to a person lynched, even though he suffered no greater injury than the loss of a finger or the slitting of an ear, for the Federal Government comes upon them from Washington and compels them to pay.

The bill makes no provision for any sort of relief to the woman or girl that may have been raped, or to the next of kin of such woman or girl who might have been raped and killed. All pay goes to the rapist or to his next of kin. It is a reward paid to the guilty, not to the victim. It is a premium put upon guilt and not innocence. It is equivalent to the case of British agents who during the Revolution paid Indians for the scalps of American men, women, and children. It pays for the raping and killing of the girls and the women of the Nation.

Let me state a case of which I have personal knowledge. In an adjoining county to the one in which I live a man died leaving a tired and worn-out little wife and a pallid little girl child of 11. They were country people, half "croppers," and dreadfully poor. One day this little woman gathered up her eggs, put them in a bucket, and sent her child with them to the neighborhood store, but 2 miles distant, for some small household necessities. The child made her purchase and started back home, but she never arrived. The mother made an outcry and the neighbors came in. They proceeded to search everywhere for the little girl. People for miles distant came to help, but the child could not be found.

Days later, while a neighbor was passing a small pond in a wooded place about half the distance between the mother's house and the store, a little white hand was seen above the water as if appealing to the throne of God for vengeance. The body of the child was recovered from the water. It was found that she had been ravished, her throat cut, and the flimsy little garments that she wore had been torn from her back and a rock fastened around her body to keep it weighted beneath the water. Search for the fiend who had soiled and mutilated this little body was initiated, and quickly resulted in the apprehension and capture of the guilty party; and in the presence of the naked, torn, and lacerated body of the child he confessed, and under these circumstances the people present killed him. These people, under this bill, are made mobsters and lynchers, and for their act the people in the county, including the mother of the dead child, would be made to pay, through taxation, to the next of kin of the fiend a sum up to $10,000. I could recite case after case equally distressing as this.

If the Federal Government has the power to exert compulsion against subdivisions of a State, then it has the power to exert compulsion against a State, for the subdivisions of the State derive all their powers from the State; and if the Federal Government can exact a penalty of $10,000 of a town, county, or city, it can exact a penalty of a hundred million against a State, and thus destroy the State.

If the Federal Government can oust a State from the enforcement of one of its criminal laws, it can take jurisdiction from the States over all crime and thus destroy the States. No such power of destruction to the States is delegated or was intended to be delegated to the Federal Government, and effort here would not be made to confer such a power except that it be necessary to serve the political exigencies of unworthy men.

In clause 2 of section 5 of the bill provision is made for the enforcement of claims against subdivisions of States by suits brought in the United States district court by the Attorney General of the United States and prosecuted by him in the name of the United States for the use of the party at interest, and all judgments obtained are to be enforced through the power of contempt, which means that in the event that judgment was obtained against a county, and the commissioners or board of control thereof, because of the lack of authority, failed or refused to levy a tax for its payment, then the Federal judge could hold them in contempt and keep them confined indefinitely or until the judgment should in some wise be satisfied.

Clause 3 of section 5 empowers the judge of the United States court in which the suit is brought for the purpose of trial to shift the suit from division to division of the district over which he presides, which means empowering the Attorney General of the United States, the chief officer of the court, and the counsel for complainant to say in what division of the district a case may be tried. It makes judicial procedure in such cases a matter of political manipulation. It deprives individuals and subdivisions of the State government of the right to have cases brought against them determined by a jury selected from the division of the court in which they reside. It means that individuals, towns, and counties may be taken clear across the State to defend themselves in a suit brought against them by the Attorney General of the United States, the chief officer of the court, and the commanding influence in determining court procedure.

Here you have the whole judicial power of the Federal Government arrayed against a small town marshal, mayor, district constable, county sheriff, town, city, or county, and all for the purpose of compelling a result demanded by a political and sectional law enacted as a price of Negro political support.

Clause 4 of section 5 of the bill provides that—

In any action instituted under this section, a showing either (a) that any peace officer or officers of the defendant governmental subdivision after timely notice of danger of mob violence failed to provide protection for the person subsequently lynched, or (b) that apprehension of danger of mob violence was general within the community where the abduction or lynching occurred, or (c) of any other circumstance or circumstances from which the trier of fact might reasonably conclude that the governmental subdivision had failed to use all diligence to protect the person or persons abducted or lynched, shall be prima facie evidence of liability.

Here the bill sets up a rule of evidence that shall operate against all peace officers or other officers of a governmental subdivision of a State.

Mr. Speaker, this is my opinion of, and reaction to, this bill as I feel constrained to express that opinion and reaction under the limitation which must necessarily attend discussion under the rule. But let me now, in an attitude of calm and dispassionate analysis, present my views upon this modern force bill.

Officially this bill is designated as "A bill to assure to persons within the jurisdiction of every State due process of law and equal protection of the laws, and to prevent the crime of lynching." Popularly it has been designated as the anti-lynching bill, a title that reflects the astute political duplicity of certain well-known pressure groups maneuvering through paid lobbyists to arouse the imagination and captivate the sympathy of large groups of our citizens and cause them to urge their Representatives in Congress to bring about its enactment into law.

The paid lobbyists and the political-pressure groups who now urge and demand the enactment of this most modern of force bills have calculated with shrewd precision the psychological effect of the popular title by which they have designated this bill. Members of the House do not refer to it as the force bill. The press of the Nation does not designate it as a force bill. Radio news commentators whose voices now are carried into all the homes of the land do not speak of it as a force bill. America would resent the passage of a force bill; but human sympathy and compassion are easily aroused to support the passage of an antilynching bill, spurious as such a title might be.

Mr. Speaker, despite its official designation, despite the spurious title which has been applied to it, this bill is not an antilynching bill. It does not prevent the crime of lynching. It could not by its terms; it cannot by its intent. By its terms this is a punitive measure, not preventive. This bill does not seek to remove the cause of crime; it imposes penalties not for the commission of offenses repugnant to our laws or to our sense of social or moral righteousness, but for the inability of the duly qualified and commissioned officers of our States to cope with emergencies usually beyond their physical power.

But were this the sole vice of this measure, Mr. Speaker, it might be tolerable upon the principle that vice so great would destroy itself. The real vice of this iniquitous measure lies in its sectionalism, its political duplicity, and the power of coercive intimidation which it places in the possession of concentrated groups under the autocratic domination of an unscrupulous and mercenary political leadership.

By its terms this bill is sectional. It excludes all but the rarest of crimes. It arouses sectional hatreds and racial animosities. It revives the racial passion and rekindles the psychological emotions of revenge that were quieted a half century ago and that have been disappearing under the wise leadership that for a time, at least, has come to prevail since then. It is a cheap and despicable bid for the votes of densely populated Negro groups in certain cities of the Republic. It is a force bill in all but name. It would not have been tolerable under Republican sponsorship. It is beneath Democratic sponsorship. It strikes at the unity of the Nation at a time when the Nation should be unified against the subversive forces and influences that but lately have been disclosed as all too numerous and active.

Mr. Speaker, the location of this National Capital by the fathers was the result of a compromise between the two great political parties that have been coeval with the Republic, not merely as reflective of the differences which they sought to resolve at the time. The compromise made then was prophetic of the future and reflected a consciousness of the geographical divergence which characterizes the United States.

The two original settlements of the Republic were more than fortuitous. As we assemble in this Chamber close upon the placid Potomac, neither North nor South, it should not be difficult to envision the conferences that brought Jefferson and Hamilton into agreement upon the location of this Capital. Today we are but a short automobile drive from the confluence of the Potomac River and the Chesapeake Bay. Along the banks of the Potomac lie broad, fertile lowlands. Along the lower Chesapeake Bay tidal rivers flow along gentle shores, a geographical feature that characterizes the Atlantic coast from the Chesapeake to the Gulf. To these broad lowlands in a temperate clime some of our ancestors came to establish new homes in this new land. Location, climate, accessibility—ineradicable geographical characteristics—gave supremacy to the pursuit of agriculture. Even with the meager facilities of an earlier era the land produced abundantly. We produced enough not merely for ourselves but an excess for export as well. And there existed foreign markets ready and eager to absorb the products of our lowland farms of the South.

North of the Potomac other settlers came. They were bound to us by ties of consanguinity. They were of the same racial stock. They sought the same liberties that we sought. Theirs was a more rigorous clime, less broad their fields, less gentle their shore lines. Whatever their ties of common ancestry, of racial stock, of political and social ideals, their economic life was governed by the immutability of their geographical environment.

This, Mr. Speaker, is but the inevitable result of the natural divergence that prevails in a republic the geographical extent of which stretches from the Atlantic to the Pacific, from Canada to the Gulf.

And it was inevitable that in the course of time, especially when facilities for commercial intercourse were limited, that this geographical divergence should be reflected in economic systems not readily adjustable, with consequent concepts politically as divergent. Mr. Speaker, the fathers of the Republic believed they had solved, in part, at least, the problems which arose out of these circumstances when they drafted the Constitution. Both North and South had met in convention, fully and freely debated their respective problems, and joined finally through ratification into a more perfect union.

That union was the union of compromise. True, a new sovereignty was created—our Federal Government. To that Government were delegated expressly the powers necessary to its function. Later, by judicial interpretation, certain powers were imputed to it as necessarily implied for the functions it was to perform—functions whose tremendous expansion we have witnessed during the past 7 years. But, Mr. Speaker, whatever the express delegation of power, regardless of the imputation of expanded powers by implication and interpretation, certain functions were reserved expressly by the States and certain functions were denied expressly to the Federal Government.

Mr. Speaker, these may appear to be elemental truths to learned Members of the Congress, trained so extensively as they are in the science of law, and schooled in the self-evident truths of American constitutional government. I do not mean to be platitudinous. But, Mr. Speaker, it has been my experience that we of the National Congress are prone at times to overlook the fundamental truths of the Constitution. We legislate as national lawmakers. We assume frequently the absence of constitutional limitation. We have been advised on occasion by high authority to legislate upon a presumption of constitutionality and permit our acts to be interpreted by the courts.

Whatever the fathers may have granted expressly, whatever may have been imputed impliedly, our Federal Constitution never did, nor does it now, contemplate the dissolution of the States. In strictly national relationships we concede the supremacy of our Federal Government. As between the States we recognize and concede the necessary operation of a Federal entity—it is basic to our concept of interstate commerce. But within each sovereign State of this Federal Union, Mr. Speaker, there still remain those fundamental rights, those fundamental powers, never granted away by the fathers, expressly reserved against the imputation of implied powers as interpreted by Federal courts, and as vital, potent, effective, and existent today as they were before by compromise we created our Federal Government and endowed it with the forces of self-preservation.

Praise God and the genius of the founding fathers, Mr. Speaker, these still are ours. They have not been delegated; they cannot be impaired by implication; they were not destroyed by the arbitrament of war. They are ours to have and hold so long as this Republic shall endure under God. Surrender them we will not. We shall not permit their invasion. May God pity and help America and the world if ever they shall be denied us; for this is the genius of our American Government.

It was an eventful and tragic day in the history of the Republic when the political genius of the Nation found it impossible to adjust in the councils of the Republic the economic and constitutional differences that emerged from our geographical divergencies. Four years of fratricidal strife took its toll of the resources of the South—of human resources as well as material. The torch of the invader laid low its homes, devastated and destroyed its fields, and left them barren wastes.

Go to Appomattox, Mr. Speaker and Members of the Congress. See there the simple plaque of an even more eventful day in the life of the Republic. Stand in that hallowed spot in the spring of the year and let the vision of an earlier spring come upon you. See still the evidence of war. Here the vanquished forces of the South laid down their arms on that eventful spring day of April 9, 1865. Envision if you can the withdrawal of a valiant military leader from the Capital of the Confederacy, and his long hours of prayerful vigil as he resolved to accept the arbitrament of war. Fall back with him and other brave men in the last retreat, their long thin lines powerless against the concentrated forces of the victor. Envision their privations—almost barefoot, in tattered uniform, hungry, weary, and footsore—they retreated, but to re-form anew if necessary and to fight on. None knew until the dawn of the last day the decision to surrender. Their tearful prayers went with their gallant commander as proudly and nobly he laid down the arms of war.

Two valiant generals met on that day, Mr. Speaker, but they met as Americans. One surrendered the implements of war in order that his people might resume the implements of peace and begin again to rebuild fields and homes and Nation. The other joined in that purpose. Soldiers of the North shared their rations with soldiers of the South. There was no conquest. Appomattox does not symbolize conquest. It does symbolize the cessation of hostilities upon the field of battle. For the South it symbolizes even more. It symbolizes the beginning of a struggle of recovery against almost overwhelming odds.

When the soldier of the South trod his weary way homeward ruin and destruction lay all about him. If his home remained at all it was a sorry sight. Many a returning soldier of the South laid his head in the ashes of the homes that had gone with the torch of war. But he took up the struggle of rebuilding that home and began anew.

Seventy-five years have passed since Appomattox, Mr. Speaker. In these 75 years the South has made a great recovery. It has contributed much to the economic welfare of the Nation. It assumed and met its own burdens and obligations resulting from the war, it pensioned its own veterans, and contributed to the support of their widows, while at the same time through the post-war confiscation of vast stores of its wealth and an onerous burden of taxation it helped to liquidate the national debt of war.

In these 75 years, Mr. Speaker, the South has assumed and met the economic burden of rehabilitating a vast population of former Negro slaves set free by the Proclamation of Emancipation adopted as a measure of war. In addition it has assumed and met the burden of educating the children and the grandchildren of those former slaves in schools that have been raised constantly to newer and higher standards as facilities permitted and conditions required. It has provided employment for its Negro population; it has provided food and clothing and shelter for them, sharing with them its own economic prosperity and progress.

I have no desire to be tutorial, Mr. Speaker. I would not presume to teach the Congress. But may I not, in the spirit of historical reminiscence, recall for the Members of this House the fact that when the erstwhile adverse progress of the war imposed upon the Government at Washington the necessity of issuing the Proclamation of Emancipation, that even though it was heralded to the Negro slaves of the South as the great blessing for which the North had entered the struggle, thousands of loyal and fine Negro servants refused to avail themselves of its terms. Even later, when paid emissaries of the Freedman's Bureau tried to entice away these loyal servants by promises of material gain, the opportunity to avenge themselves for imaginary wrongs upon their former masters, the right to vote, and the power to control the governments of the States in which they lived—the same procedure pursued by paid lobbyists today—the loyal, high-minded, and best of the Negroes refused to be enticed, rejected the alluring inducement, and held in scorn and contempt both scalawag and Negro inciter alike.

The decent Negroes of the South, descendants of these loyal servants of a former day, do not demand nor urge the passage of this legislation, Mr. Speaker. They have no fear of a denial of due process or equal protection under the laws of the States in which they live. They have lived at peace under those laws; they have acquired property and made homes under those laws; they have reared families under those laws; under those laws they have secured for themselves and for their children the blessings of a free education without the necessity of contributing a penny of taxation.

Nor do these loyal and decent citizens of the South fear mob violence. They have no cause to. They do not commit the crimes that arouse the angry passion of the group and cause it to take the execution of the law into its own hands. Mr. Speaker, lynching is the rarest of crimes. Authentic statistics compiled by the most reliable of sources show that the crime of lynching is the one crime which has diminished almost constantly since statistics concerning it have been kept.

According to the Tuskegee Institute, there was a total of 4,643 lynchings of both white persons and Negroes throughout the United States during the years 1882 to 1934. Of that number, 3,352 were Negroes, 1,291 were white persons. During that period the highest number of lynchings of colored persons occurred in 1892, when 162 Negroes were lynched. By 1901 the number of Negroes lynched had decreased to 25, the highest number during the period 1901 to 1939. In 1934 only 15 Negroes were lynched; in 1937, only 8; and in 1939, only 2. Here, indeed, is eloquent testimony that there is no need for this bill as a preventive of the crime of lynching.

Lynching is not a cause; it is an effect. It will disappear entirely when the cause for it disappears. Those who urge the enactment of this iniquitous measure deliberately seek to make it appear that lynching is a crime of only the South and that only Negroes are lynched. Yet, as I have indicated, the facts belie the imputation.

Group execution without formal trial is the practice of the frontier of civilization. It always has been. The frontier ever has felt it necessary to impose summary justice upon those who violate its laws and customs. In the annals of our history it has not been uncouth for us to look with approval upon the vigilantes of our constantly receding frontier. Our historical fiction, our motion-picture dramatization of the life of the frontier abounds with the unceremonious execution of the horse thief, the cattle rustler, the stage-coach bandit, and the road agent. But while we look with approval upon the summary execution of the horse thief and justify that execution upon the principle of the exigencies of frontier life and as a crime deterrent, we frown upon the summary execution of the desperado who rapes the women of our land.

I do not justify lynching, Mr. Speaker. I do not seek to defend it. I abhor the necessary execution of even the convicted criminal. But, Mr. Speaker, will you distinguish the greater crime—the theft of my horse or the rape of my wife or my daughter? This vicious and iniquitous measure would compensate the family of one summarily executed by the community for the crime of rape. But what about compensation for the victim of his foul lust? Death were better for her and her family. Let me ask you, Mr. Speaker; let me ask you, Mr. Proponent; let me ask all of you, Members of this House of Representatives, suppose the crime of rape should invade your homes, what would you do for your stricken mother, your ravished wife, your despoiled daughter, if life should be spared to them? Such a horrible fate never may befall those of you who do not live among groups whose criminal members have been incited to rape in the frenzied hatred of racial revenge for imaginary wrongs, but it has been a constant menace to the women of the South. This iniquitous measure will increase that menace; it will revive the frenzy of imaginary wrongs; it will inculcate a false security; it places a premium upon the commission of the most beastly of crimes.

Mr. Speaker, the consideration of any legislative measure involves the consideration of its constitutionality. The organization of our legislative department is such that ordinarily the presumption of constitutionality attaches to all measures reported from our committees. Under our committee system, a part of the genius of our Government, there is a proper presumption that consideration has been given to the constitutionality of a measure before it is reported. Here in the House such a presumption is fortified by our system of a Rules Committee, before which, if necessary, the issue of constitutionality may be raised and debated. Thus there attaches to this bill, as well as to all other measures, a prima facie presumption of constitutionality.

Aside from this presumption of constitutionality there exists as a part of our genius of government the doctrine of judicial review, a doctrine, although peculiar to America, yet sanctioned, nevertheless, by unbroken precedent of almost 140 years. Necessarily a part of such a doctrine there must and there does prevail the corollary doctrine of stare decisis. To both, of course, Mr. Speaker, I subscribe. In the early development of our Federal judicial system, with a life tenure of the judges, and the normal tendency of our courts generally to stabilize their decisions and, through them, the law, it is not unlikely that the doctrine of stare decisis achieved considerable emphasis. Where it was based upon the decisions of the court itself, its use may or may not have been supremely desirable.

But whatever the considerations that may have come to attach to it, it has been overshadowed lately by a new doctrine and a new philosophy—the doctrine of “neology.” We boast that we have brought our courts up to date. Whatever my views and the views of many of you with respect to some of the ancient landmarks, the constitutionality of the legislation we enact today will be determined in Federal courts that have been brought up to date.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot accept entirely without challenge the constitutionality of this measure. By section 1 the act is self-declaratory as to its inclusion within the provisions of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution. If this be so, it must fall within the provisions of section 1 of the fourteenth amendment. But what are these provisions? They are as follows:

All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

The fourteenth amendment to the Constitution has been given great consideration by the Supreme Court of the United States. Its novelty at the time of its adoption, the interpretative possibilities later discovered to lie within its implications, and the extensiveness of its ramifications are so well known, so prone to forensic discussion, that it would be inappropriate, futile, and didactic for me to attempt such a presentation as is requisite or justifiable. But upon a few of the fundamental concepts of the amendment specifically designated by this bill as the basis of its enactment I may with propriety, and with that forbearance which characterizes the membership of this House in great issues, presume to present my opinion of its constitutionality.

The fourteenth amendment was proposed by Congress on June 13, 1866, the date on which it passed the House of Representatives, having previously passed the Senate on June 8. Its ratification was completed on July 9, 1868, when the legislature of the twenty-eighth State—there being then 37 States in the Union—gave approval. Thus it is a product primarily of reconstruction sentiment and post-war legislative activities.

By its very terms it is, first, affirmatively declaratory in nature; second, it is directed affirmatively to action by the State; and, third, it contemplates that the denial of equal protection of the laws—which it prohibits—is to flow from affirmative action by the State, acting in its sovereign capacity. It contemplated the new power to be assigned to the Federal Government as in contrast to that which existed before its adoption, to wit, to examine State laws and supervise their execution for the purpose of preventing them from invading the rights of individuals secured by the Constitution, as prior thereto the Federal Government in its functions was secured from interference by the States. The fourteenth amendment presumes not merely the supremacy of the Federal Government under constitutional limitations, but it extends expressly the power of the Federal Government to the protection of individuals and to the rights and immunities which are guaranteed to them by the Constitution. But upon what predication? Why, that the States may not affirmatively abridge privileges and immunities, or affirmatively deprive of life, liberty, or property, or affirmatively deny equal protection of the laws.

And upon what principle? Why, the principle of due process. But it is affirmative action by the State that is contemplated by the fourteenth amendment—action by the State in its sovereign capacity. Prior to the adoption of the amendment the laws of the States were not subject to review in Federal courts for the purpose of deciding whether the States had denied due process for the purposes indicated or denied equal protection. The limitations contained within the Bill of Rights were limitations not upon the States but upon the Federal Government.

Who will contend that the power granted by section 3 of this measure would not prohibit a State from securing officers to enforce its laws and thus destroy its very existence? The power to tax being the power to destroy; the power to penalize and imprison is, in my opinion, nonetheless so. How long could a State hope to induce men to accept office, knowing that their physical inability to cope with a mob would place them in a Federal prison and cause them to be fined? But this is the fate under this bill which confronts any officer or any employee of a State or any governmental subdivision thereof, from Governor to peace officer of the lowest rank.

It will be recalled that in the Civil Rights cases, decided in 1883, the Supreme Court said that the fourteenth amendment does not authorize Congress to create a code of municipal law for the regulation of private rights, but to provide modes of redress against the operation of State laws and the action of State officers, executive or judicial, when these are subversive of the fundamental rights specified in the amendment. The Court itself observed that were it to have held the Civil Rights Act as constitutional it would have been difficult to set limits to the powers of Congress.

In Strouder against West Virginia the operation of a State law was involved; in Virginia against Rives the operations of a State law was involved.

The general principles established by the Supreme Court with respect to the fourteenth amendment are: (1) That its prohibitions are upon the State; (2) that Congress has no primary and direct legislative authority to define and enforce the rights guaranteed by the amendment; and (3) that the general police powers are still possessed by the States. As late as 1892 in Logan against United States, in which the Supreme Court reviewed its previous adjudications upon this issue, it said:

The whole scope and effect of this series of decisions is that certain fundamental rights, recognized and declared, but not granted or created in some of the amendments to the Constitution are thereby guaranteed only against violations or abridgement by the United States or by the States.

Even later, in 1903, the Supreme Court again reviewed the issues in James against Bowman and reached the same conclusion.

I contend that by the decisions in the Slaughter House and subsequent cases the command laid upon the States to respect Federal privileges and immunities has been shorn of all but declaratory significance, that the general police powers are confirmed in the States, and that although there is confirmed in the Federal Government a very extensive supervisory jurisdiction over State legislation which it did not possess prior to 1868, such jurisdiction is over legislation and not directly over officers of the States who may be incapable of performing their functions by agencies beyond human control. It is only when claims have been made that a State law had worked deprivations of life, liberty, or property without due process of law or had resulted in a denial of equal protection of the laws that Federal courts have assumed jurisdiction.

But I contend that the fourteenth amendment as interpreted by the Supreme Court has not wrought any fundamental changes in our constitutional system; that no new direct legislative power has been given to the Congress; that the only power conferred upon Congress by the amendment is the power to provide relief in cases in which the States have deprived those within their jurisdiction of life, liberty, or property without due process or denied equal protection of the laws. And I contend that this cannot be interpreted to include the power sought to be conferred by this bill over all officers or employees of a State under the conditions enumerated in section 3 thereof. Moreover, I contend that the power granted to Congress under the fourteenth amendment extends only to the voidance of offending State laws or to the issuance of appropriate writs and that it cannot, as is proposed in this bill, be made to extend to the trial, conviction, and punishment contemplated therein. I am convinced that in the final analysis the effect of the fourteenth amendment has been rather to act as a limitation upon the powers of the States rather than as a grant of additional powers to the Federal Government.

Mr. Speaker, I am compelled to challenge the constitutionality of a measure so unique as the one now before us. Can this Federal Government constitutionally prosecute, indict, and penalize by force and imprisonment the officer of a State who, seeking to enforce its laws, finds it beyond human power to do so? Can this Congress constitutionally penalize a State or a subdivision thereof for the inability of one of its employees to perform the duty with which such State or subdivision has charged him? If these powers lie within the purview of the Federal Government, then the governments of the States will disappear, and the genius of our American Government be destroyed.

This bill places the Attorney General of the Federal Government in direct supervision over the acts not only of the law-enforcement officers of the State but over all other State officers; and it gives him, in addition, direct jurisdiction over the citizens of a State in their relationships with the government of the State in which they reside. Was such a course ever contemplated by the fathers?

I recognize the power of the Attorney General of the United States to proceed against offenders of the laws of the United States wherever he may find them. But I cannot subscribe to a proposal that would give him jurisdiction over the officers of a State government or the citizens of a State acting under the jurisdiction of a State or the laws of a State, where such jurisdiction and such laws are not intended to be within the jurisdiction of the United States or such functions subject to the supervision of the United States.

And I am unwilling to concede that such jurisdiction can be conferred merely by a declaration that it is conferred.

Section 5 of this iniquitous measure makes every governmental subdivision of a State civilly liable for any lynching which may occur within its jurisdiction or for any lynching which follows upon the seizure and abduction of the victims within its jurisdiction. The liability ranges from $2,000 to $10,000 and may be enforced in a civil action in a Federal district court. The action in such cases is to be brought and prosecuted by the Attorney General of the United States, in the name of the United States, but for the use of the real party in interest. If the judgment is not satisfied upon demand, payment may be enforced by any power available for the enforcement of any money judgment against a governmental subdivision. Any officer or person who fails to comply with the order or decree enforcing the judgment is made guilty of contempt of the court from which the decree proceeds.

I know of but one constitutional method under our Government to provide for the payment of claims against a government or any subdivision thereof. Our Federal Constitution provides that no money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law; and this principle runs through our entire system of government down to its smallest subdivision.

This was the method adopted by the fathers to assure to the people power over the public purse and to place within the lawmaking bodies of the land jurisdiction over public funds. Since governmental funds can be raised only by taxation, and since by our genius of government there cannot be taxation without representation, our people retain within their own power control over the raising and the expenditure of all public funds. While it is true that within each division of our Government a superior sovereignty is granted power over inferior sovereignties to collect revenue necessary for the conduct of government, it is so merely because the people themselves have conferred such power. As between independent sovereignties, however, no such power exists. One State may not levy a tax upon another, and the Federal Government may not impose taxes upon the States except in accordance with well-defined constitutional principles and precepts.

I already have pointed out that to confer upon the Federal Government power to impose penalties and imprisonment upon the officers of a State government is potentially no less destructive than the power of taxation as declared by Mr. Justice Marshall in McCullough against Maryland. How much more potentially destructive is the procedure contemplated by this measure, to wit, that upon failure of an officer of a State governmental subdivision to comply with the decree of a Federal court in the enforcement of a judgment under its terms such officer shall be guilty of contempt of that court and punished accordingly. Here we perceive the sorry spectacle of the officer of a State taken from the jurisdiction of the laws and the courts of his State and penalized by a Federal court for an act which he could not prevent within the State and within the jurisdiction of the State.

Suppose the State should refuse to surrender its officer to the marshal of the Federal court? Suppose the State should instruct its officer to resist the decree of the Federal court? What then? Shall we witness the Federal Government proceeding in all its might and power against the State? Suppose the State resists. Will there then resound again the clash of arms between the States? If this measure be constitutional, is it enforceable? Is it but a futile gesture, or does it bear the seeds of future fratricidal strife?

The fathers recognized the need for and created the dual government which has made America great. While today the states of Europe destroy one another in the most deadly of wars, America is at peace because its people, living in 48 States of great geographical and economic divergences, have learned how to adjust their differences under a principle of government unique in the history of the world.

Although diverse geographically, spread over a vast continent, possessing the most divergent economic characteristics, the States of our great Republic are bound together by the ties of consanguinity, of a common language, of identical principles, and ideals of government. A magnificent network of splendid highways affords easy access to every part of the Republic. Great national railway systems join coast with coast. Our waterways carry an internal commerce that links interior with ocean lanes, transcontinental airways have knit the Nation into a unified whole, and the radio makes us one. We are at peace among ourselves. True, the problems of a changing era have tended to increase the burdens of our daily life, but they are the burdens of peace, not the burdens of war.

Would you change that now by raising the issue of sectionalism, by imposing upon some of our States the humiliating and degrading conditions proposed by this unrighteous bill in order to pander to the degrading demands of paid lobbyists and political opportunists?

Mr. Speaker, this is the most iniquitous, mischievous, capricious, and degrading measure that has been advocated since force bills first sought to humiliate a great people; and I hope that it may meet a well-merited defeat.

The SPEAKER. The question is, shall the Committee on Rules be discharged from further consideration of the resolution.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Cox) there were—ayes 170, noes, 67.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 256, nays 114, answered "present" 1, not voting 52, as follows:

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That upon the day succeeding the adoption of this resolution, a special order be, and is hereby, created by the House of Representatives for the consideration of H. R. 801, a public bill which has remained in the Committee on the Judiciary for 30 or more days without action. That such special order be, and is hereby, created, notwithstanding any further action on said bill by the Committee on the Judiciary, or any rule of the House. That on said day the Speaker shall recognize the Representative from New York, JOSEPH A. GAVAGAN, to call up H. R. 801, a bill to assure to persons within the jurisdiction of every State due process of law and equal protection of the laws, and to prevent the crime of lynching, as a special order of business, and to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of said H. R. 801. After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 6 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the Member of the House requesting the rule for the consideration of said H. R. 801 and the Member of the House who is opposed to the said H. R. 801, to be designated by the Speaker, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill, and the amendments thereto, to final passage, without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit. The special order shall be a continuing order until the bill is finally disposed of.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. At this point the Chair designates the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, to have control of the time in opposition to the bill.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 8, 1940.

HOUR OF MEETING

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker—and I shall not object—I simply wish to make it plain that the purpose is that tomorrow is to be devoted to general debate and that the antilynching bill will then be taken up for reading on Wednesday?

Mr. RAYBURN. If this consent is granted, I intend to ask unanimous consent that the business in order on Calendar Wednesday may be dispensed with, so that this bill may be read on Wednesday and completed on Wednesday. There will be nothing tomorrow except general debate on the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that business in order on Calendar Wednesday of this week may be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BOREN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. MOUTON, for 10 days, on account of business.

To Mr. GEYER of California (at the request of Mr. VOORHIS), indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. HENNINGS (at the request of Mr. ROMJUE), indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. SMITH of Illinois, indefinitely, on account of illness.

THE LATE EDWARD W. CURLEY

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, it is with great sorrow I find it necessary to announce the death of Hon. EDWARD W. CURLEY, a Member of the House of Representatives from the State of New York.

Mr. CURLEY, who had been a Member of this House since 1935, had, during this time in office, taken a very active part in all matters beneficial to the people of his district, the State of New York and the country.

At a later date I will discuss more fully the life, character, and public service of my deceased colleague, Mr. CURLEY.

Mr. Speaker, I send to the desk the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 341

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. EDWARD W. CURLEY, a Representative from the State of New York.

Resolved, That a committee of Members of the House with such Members of the Senate as may be joined be appointed to attend the funeral.

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms of the House be authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary for carrying out the provision of these resolutions and that the necessary expenses in connection therewith be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The resolution was agreed to.

The Speaker appointed the following committee: Mr. SULLIVAN, Mr. FITZPATRICK, Mr. BUCKLEY of New York, and Mr. BARTON.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the resolution:

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect the House do now adjourn.

The resolution was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT

Accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 52 minutes p. m.), pursuant to its order heretofore entered, the House adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, January 9, 1940, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, JANUARY 9, 1940

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Master of the hidden fire, we thank Thee for the gift of divinity in the human soul and for its power of expression. We earnestly pray that we may be true to ourselves, for earth with heavy sins and griefs is overplussed. Hush the voice of passion in our own breasts by quickening every aspiration that keeps open the vision of our Saviour. Heavenly Father, fan our faith to brighter glow until the dark of self is broken with the wedges of Thy clear light. Search us, O God, and know our hearts; try us and know our thoughts, and see if there be any wicked way in us; and lead us in the way everlasting, and Thine shall be the praise. Through Christ, our glorified Redeemer. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 884. An act to add certain lands to the Siuslaw National Forest in the State of Oregon;

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 823. An act for the relief of John P. Shorter;

S. 2384. An act for the relief of Lyle L. Bressler; and

S. 2876. An act to amend the Annual and Sick Leave Acts of March 14, 1936.

The message also announced that the Senate had adopted the following resolution:

Senate Resolution 211

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. EDWARD W. CURELY, late a Representative from the State of New York.

Resolved, That a committee of two Senators be appointed by the Vice President to join the committee appointed on the part of the House of Representatives to attend the funeral of the deceased Representative.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased Representative the Senate do now adjourn.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, on January 3 the House granted me permission to address the House for 20 minutes today. I now ask that that time be transferred to Friday of this week.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

DIPLOMATIC RELATIONS WITH RUSSIA

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, it is my compelling and considered conviction that the United States Government should sever diplomatic relations with Soviet Russia. [Applause.] I sent a letter, stating my views on this subject, to the President of the United States under date of December 1, and received a reply.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to incorporate as a part of my remarks the communication which I sent to the President.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

The letter referred to follows:

DECEMBER 1, 1939.

The Honorable FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT,

The President, the White House, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: The people of the United States generally believe that the Russian attack on Finland is both inhuman and unwarranted. The invasion, in my opinion, is an ugly blot on civilization.

I wish to commend you upon your denunciation of the Soviet aggression, as expressed in your interview with the press today. I do strongly urge, however, that you assume leadership to the end that this country sever diplomatic relations with the communistic Government of Russia.

When we renewed our recognition of that country a solemn pledge was given that Russia would not attempt to interfere in the internal affairs of the United States. There is no doubt but what that assurance has been repeatedly violated. Authentic disclosures cause us to realize that many of the organizations and groups that are operating in this Republic with the definite purpose of undermining our institutions of government are directed not from sources within our own land but that orders and plans actually originate in Moscow.

I fervently hope that steps can promptly be taken that will bring about the severance of our recognition of an evil government which clearly is intent upon bringing needless tragedy to an honest Finnish people and is actually at work in an attempt to destroy Christian citizenship in America.

Faithfully and cordially yours,

JENNINGS RANDOLPH.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield.

Mr. FISH. Will the gentleman put in the RECORD also his resolution to sever diplomatic relations with Russia?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I have not introduced such a resolution, but such legislation has already been proposed. I may also introduce a similar measure. The subject should be given early consideration.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SECCOMBE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a statement from Cloyd W. Miller, president of the Hickory Clay Products Co., entitled "Two Sides of the Discussion Government (R. F. C.) Versus A Small Business Man Regarding Loans, Terms, Respective Responsibilities"; and also a letter to Mr. Sam Husbands, of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the requests will be granted.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. CROWE. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday I asked for and received permission to address the House for 5 minutes today following the completion of the legislative program. Owing to the late hour at which the legislative program will be completed today, I ask unanimous consent that this permission be changed to Friday of this week following special orders that may already have been entered for that day.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks on the life, character, and public service of the late Wallace E. Pierce.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS ACT

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I take pleasure in directing to your personal attention the second national survey, titled "Industry's Private Opinion of the Labor Board," as conducted by Factory Management and Maintenance.

If you will take time to read the article that is published in the January 1940 Factory, you will note that while industry lays much of the Wagner Act's failure to the National Labor Relations Board, it is insistent on needs for drastic revision of the act itself. The severity of Management's condemnation of labor and the Board is shown by these figures:

A NATIONAL SECRET POLL OF INDUSTRY

Twenty-three to one said that the law and its administration have failed to accomplish the stated objectives of the National Labor Relations Act.

Twenty-eight to one said that the Board has not been fair and impartial in its decisions.

Twelve to one said that the Board has not been fair and impartial in its interpretations of the act.

Eleven to one said that the Board has not been fair and impartial in its dealings between unions.

Twenty-five to one said that the Board has not been fair and impartial in its dealings between employers and employees.

It seems to me that if the Members of Congress want to do something to put the 10,000,000 unemployed in this country back to work in industry Congress could do no act that would assist so much the labor of this country in securing jobs in industry, and by so doing we would take them off the Government pay rolls, where they are a direct charge to the operation of our Government. I am firmly convinced the opinion of men who are now engaged in industry, as well as many in labor, are very desirous that the act itself be changed in order that it will give them greater opportunities to conduct in a peaceful manner their own negotiations with their employer for satisfied business relations. Until labor and management have equal rights and equal opportunities under the law business will not go ahead and create jobs, and, after all, the businessmen of this country can create more jobs in private industry. And let us remember the watchword of American independence was "opportunity"; and when you destroy that in business, then men lose their jobs, industry stops, and people suffer unless the Government comes to their aid.

Why not make the changes in the act that will assist labor, that will assist industry, and let us put the men in this country who want to work back on the pay rolls and take them off of the pay rolls of the Government? The quicker we do this the better it will be for America, American labor, and American industry. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. GARTNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an article by Col. Vincent A. Carroll entitled "The Voice of the Unknown Soldier."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. JENKS of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. JENKS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENKS of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, I rise to denounce the unfairness, the unsoundness, and the utter stupidity of a Government agency in perverting its official privilege of issuing reports for public consumption to purposes of singling out any one section of this great country of ours, stigmatizing it with failure, and marking it for ultimate doom.

I refer to a report entitled "Labor and the Decline of the Amoskeag Textile Mills," recently issued by the National Research Project of the Work Projects Administration. The persons responsible for the misinformation carried in this report are either totally incompetent of gathering accurate data or guilty of twisting facts and figures to serve motives both questionable and doubtful.

I ask permission to insert here an Associated Press dispatch which appeared in the New York Times of last Sunday, January 7, citing the findings—completely false and misleading—carried in this report.

EAST'S TEXTILE CUT IS LAID TO THREE CAUSES—SUBSTITUTE FIBERS, OVEREXPANSION, AND LOW WAGES IN SOUTH ARE BLAMED BY THE W. P. A.—AMOSKEAG CASE STRESSED—IT RAISES ISSUE OF THE SOCIAL RESPONSIBILITY OF BUSINESS, FEDERAL REPORT ASSERTS

WASHINGTON, January 6.—The decline of the cotton textile industry in New England, leaving thousands unemployed and stranding entire communities, was attributed in a Federal report today to overexpansion of the industry and competition from substitute fibers and low-wage southern mills.

The report, compiled by the Work Projects Administration, used the closing of the Amoskeag Mills at Manchester, N. H., once the world's largest single cotton manufacturing unit, as an example of the plight of New England cotton-mill centers.

The general decline in New England's cotton industry also was attributed partly to obsolescence of "machinery and mill management."

In the case of Amoskeag, which once employed 16,000 workers, the report stated that, "although many factors affected its decline, the most important was the withdrawal of needed capital funds at a critical point in the history of the company."

Of the 11,000 workers directly affected by the closing, the report said:

"The types of adjustment available to those economically stranded in the depressed area have been limited reemployment in Manchester and adjoining communities, restricted emigration, and, as usually was the case, dependency upon some form of governmental assistance."

SHUT-DOWN CALLED "CALAMITOUS"

Gainfully employed persons in Manchester totaled 35,000 out of a population of 75,000 in 1930, the report said, and the shut-down affecting 11,000 was "of calamitous proportions."

The closing of the mill, however, the report continued, "raises the question of social responsibility of business."

The owners' decision to withdraw capital which they had "accumulated producing cotton and woolen goods in Manchester has meant unemployment, loss of income, migration, and general disorganization of the labor market," it added.

More than a year after the shut-down nearly one-fourth of the dismissed workers had left the city and only two-fifths of the men and women remaining had had any work.

Only one-third of the men and one-sixth of the women were working when Works Progress Administration investigators made a survey of former employees of Amoskeag in 1937.

Although Manchester businessmen and bankers took over the Amoskeag properties and leased them to industries, chiefly shoe manufacturing establishments, only 3,200 persons were employed by 1937, the report said, and by September 1938 this number had been reduced to 1,600.

During 1937 and 1938, the report said, a higher proportion of families received general relief in Manchester than in any other of 23 New England cities for which information is available.

CITY'S FUTURE IS DISCUSSED

Discussing the future of the city, the report said:

"The city's economic prospects depend obviously on the establishment of new companies and the expansion of industries already operating there. The latter are now confined mainly to the boot and shoe industry.

"Accordingly, the problem of Manchester, as of other stranded textile cities, may be considered in terms of the economics of industrial location."

The report added, however, that "it should be clear industries oriented toward raw materials will not be attracted to Manchester for the simple reason the Manchester area has no raw materials."

Nor is Manchester so situated that it would have any attraction for industries that should be oriented toward markets, the report continued.

Citing the decline of the textile industry as early as 1929 in Lowell, Fall River, and New Bedford, Mass., the report said that new industrial development in southern New England, situated closer to the New York and Philadelphia markets, had taken place.

Both Fall River and New Bedford, farther south in the State than Lowell, made considerably more progress than Lowell in reemploying workers, the report said.

Between 1929 and 1936 jobs in industries other than cotton textiles increased 36.2 percent in Fall River, 107.6 percent in New Bedford, while in Lowell the number remained "practically stationary."

To say that I resent this unjust and unwarranted attack on New England, the cradle of American democracy, where industry, thrift, and stability have flourished from the time of the landing of the Pilgrims right on through to this day, and the appallingly untruthful citations made regarding the state of affairs in Manchester, N. H., the largest city in the State—and, incidentally, my home city—is expressing my sentiments in exceedingly mild terms.

According to the newspaper item inserted above, this W. P. A. report takes the all-time peak employment figure of 16,000, which prevailed during the period of the World War at the Amoskeag Mills, whereas the normal employment figure in that plant was less than half that figure. The report further states that after the closing of the Amoskeag Mills in 1935 nearly one-fourth of the dismissed workers left Manchester, and only two-fifths of the men and women remaining had any work. There is no gainsaying the fact that the liquidation of the Amoskeag Mills caused a temporary employment disturbance in Manchester, but there is no basis of fact for the statement carried in this thoroughly erroneous report issued by the W. P. A. to the effect that the shut-down of the Amoskeag Mills was "calamitous." As a matter of fact, the employment figure at the Amoskeag Mills as of September 1935, the year in which the plant was closed, was approximately 5,000, and today there are employed approximately 4,500 persons by Amoskeag Industries, Inc., which activities are housed in the mile-long buildings, stretched along the Merrimack River, formerly occupied by the Amoskeag Mills. If in 1935, 5,000 people were employed in the Amoskeag Mills at the time the plant was closed, and there are now 4,500 people employed in the same structure that once housed this largest textile industry in the United States, it would seem that all is not lost nor that the city of Manchester has passed into the category of a ghost town, tragically entombed in memories of its once flourishing prosperity, as indicated by this W. P. A. report.

The official census of 1930 showed the population of Manchester to be 76,834, and the police census of 1939 shows the population to be 80,107.

The official clearing-house figures for Manchester in 1935, the year in which the Amoskeag Mills were closed, were $26,132,997, and for 1939, $30,481,532.

A further indication of the financial soundness of the city of Manchester is indicated by the fact that it has one of the best credit ratings in New England, as attested by the interest rate, charged on a $500,000 loan which the city obtained in December, of twenty-one one-hundredths of 1 percent, which happens to be the lowest interest rate extended to any city throughout the entire country.

The December 1939 issue of Forbes magazine cites Manchester as ranking eighth among the first 10 cities in the United States, regardless of size, as having enjoyed the highest percentage of increased business during the first 10 months of 1939 as compared with the corresponding period of 1938.

Happily the facts relating to the aftermath of the liquidation of the Amoskeag mills have long since been accurately told by disinterested persons qualified to ascertain and set forth the true story of the perilous period through which Manchester passed, which discloses the heroic efforts that the people of the Queen City made to cope successfully with a situation that might have swamped a people of less courage, initiative, intelligence, and faith. I quote from an article entitled "A City That Wouldn't Die," by Henry Denton, which appeared in the August 1937 edition of the American magazine:

The city of Manchester, N. H., until December 1935, was noted chiefly as the home of the Amoskeag Manufacturing Co., the largest mill in the world. Indeed, the city was the mill, its destinies woven on the same looms which for 192 years had many times over engirdled the globe with cloth, had outfitted the armies of the Nation with blue, gray, and olive drab, and had even covered the prairie schooners with white for the westward march.

A city of 80,000 population, Manchester found its pride and its reason to be in Amoskeag's 75 factory buildings, ranging 3½ miles on each side of the Merrimack River. * * *

Manchester was secure in Amoskeag. It never questioned its permanence or its stability. * * *

So Manchester believed until Christmas week in 1935, when the largest mill in the world went bankrupt. The city stared, blinking and uncomprehending, at the ruins. It was stunned. The impossible had happened. Manchester had collapsed.

There was a meeting of a leading civic organization in the Hotel Carpenter the day after that announcement was made, and a stunned membership, representing all trades, businesses, and professions, came groping for explanations and understanding. They gathered in knots about the lobby before the meeting, looked dazedly at one another, and tried desperately to make sense of it. * * *

Bankruptcy meant that the largest mill in the world was dying, and if it expired it could never be brought back to life again. But everybody already knew that. Nothing came of the meeting except a renewal of fear and desperation. The town could not be saved. The mixed-up finances of Amoskeag seemed too deep for average understanding.

And yet, 1 year later, members of the same civic organization pushed their way to another meeting through the largest Christmas-shopping crowd Manchester had ever seen. They met in the lobby, slapped one another on the back, and boasted about the volume of the year's business and grumbled about the size of the income tax they would have to pay. They sang lustily and enjoyed themselves thoroughly. Manchester was on the way back fast. Its population was growing, and it was having more fun than it had had in half a century. Mill stacks were belching clouds of smoke again.

Today the threat of disaster that hung over the city for a quarter of a century is gone. Its eggs are no longer in one basket. Its industries are diversified. Its workers are getting good wages. The city is being advertised nationally. Traveling salesmen are scurrying about the country selling Manchester and Manchester goods. Once again its machinery is humming, and merchants' cash registers are ringing jingle bells.

The explanation is simple: A community with original, courageous, and intelligent citizens simply lifted itself by its own bootstraps. This town joined hands in a common enterprise.

Again I quote from an article entitled "Cotton Rich," by the economist, John T. Flynn, which appeared in the July 24, 1937, edition of Collier's Weekly—

In Manchester the closing of the mill was nothing short of a community disaster. It ranked with a pestilence or a tornado or a foreign invasion or an airplane raid. So the people of the town acted as they act in a case of public calamity. A group of businessmen got together. They said to themselves—here is the big bread-and-butter mill of the town closed. Thousands of workers will stop getting pay checks and of course they will cease to visit the merchants. So this is not merely a case of Amoskeag going on the rocks. It's a case of the town being on the rocks. What to do?

Well, what they needed was employers—men who would manufacture something and hire men and women. That was simple. And that, incidentally, is precisely the problem of the whole country. Here, they said, is a vast property with innumerable buildings. Some of them have modern weaving machinery in them. Most of them are capable of being used by other manufacturers. They have been the town's biggest asset. Why should they cease to be an asset? As soon as they began to think about it they began to get ideas as hard-headed New Hampshire men would. The company was in bankruptcy. Therefore the property once assessed at $35,000,000 could be bought at a bargain. They learned from the bankruptcy court it could be bought for around $5,000,000. Therefore merchants, businessmen raised funds and got the banks to back the project and bought the whole outfit for $5,000,000. They were then in a position to offer a bargain to outside manufacturers. They could sell them sections of the mill at 11 cents on the dollar. Not only would the buyer get a bargain, but thereafter, he would get a low assessment and, hence, low taxes, and it was taxes which, among other things, helped to kill the Amoskeag. In no time at all they induced a big textile company to buy a part of the mill. They got a great shoe manufacturer to take another part of the mill. They got the local power company to buy the mill's water-power plant. They got various other manufacturers to buy other buildings. Already from 4,000 to 6,000 persons are back at work in the new mills. Those working are working full time instead of the half time the old Amoskeag employees worked, and they are getting a lot more pay and at better hours.

Despite the pessimistic blunderings and mournful wailings of any W. P. A. report, the sturdy, thriving city of Manchester will continue to grow and flourish by virtue of the courage, industry, and thrift of its citizens and without the approval of W. P. A.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and to include therein an article by Mr. Leland Stowe on the Finnish-Russian War appearing in the Evening Star, of Washington.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ANGELL].

There was no objection.

Mr. BRYSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a speech delivered by me at Wilmington, Del., last night at a Jackson Day dinner.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BRYSON].

There was no objection.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is not a quorum present.

Mr. BOEHNE. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House. A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 4]

Allen, La.	Duncan	Kennedy, Md.	Robertson
Barton	Edmiston	Kirwan	Sasser
Bell	Engel	McArdle	Schaefer, Ill.
Boland	Englebright	McLaughlin	Schiffner
Brewster	Evans	Maciejewski	Schuetz
Brooks	Ferguson	Magnuson	Schwert
Buckler, Minn.	Fernandez	Martin, Ill.	Smith, Ill.
Buckley, N. Y.	Flannery	May	Somers, N. Y.
Burdick	Folger	Merritt	Stegall
Cartwright	Fulmer	Michener	Taylor
Celler	Geyer, Calif.	Monroney	Tenerowicz
Chapman	Gifford	Mouton	Tibbott

Disney	Jarrett	Parsons	White, Ohio
Dondoro	Jensen	Patrick	Wood
Doughton	Johnson, W. Va.	Pfeifer	Woodruff, Mich.
Drewry	Keefe	Reece, Tenn.

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and thirty-eight Members have answered to their names; a quorum.

Further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LEWIS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein the story of the life of Cloyd W. Miller, president of the Hickory Clay Products Co., of Mineral City, Ohio, written to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for the purpose of securing a loan from that Corporation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a letter from Cloyd W. Miller under date of December 11, 1939, to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

THE LATE J. WILL TAYLOR

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Speaker, it was my privilege to serve with our late colleague, the Honorable J. WILL TAYLOR, on the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization. Mr. TAYLOR, during the 7 years I served on that committee as one of his associates, was the ranking member of the committee and rendered valuable assistance to me and to the remainder of my colleagues on the committee. I was sincerely grieved when the information of his passing came to me in California.

As a member of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization I offered in the committee a resolution with regard to the passing of our late colleague, and this resolution was unanimously adopted by the committee. I ask unanimous consent that I may insert this resolution at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The resolution referred to follows:

The Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, in executive session, desires to spread upon its records the deep regret and sorrow of its members owing to the death of Hon. J. WILL TAYLOR, of Tennessee, who departed this life immediately after the adjournment of the second session of the Seventy-sixth Congress.

Our late colleague became a member of this committee upon his election to Congress in 1919 and served continuously on the committee during his entire term of office, and at the time of his death was the ranking minority member. He rendered able and distinguished service in the capacities in which he served. He was held in high esteem by his colleagues in the House who mourn his passing. The members of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization tender to his widow and family sincere sympathy in their loss and bereavement.

Samuel Dickstein, Charles Kramer, Lex Green, E. C. Gathings, Anton Maciejewski, John Lesinski, Caroline O'Day, George Grant, John L. McMillan, N. M. Mason, John Z. Anderson, Henry O. Talle, Cliff Clevenger, W. R. Poage, A. Leonard Allen.

ANTILYNCHING BILL

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 801) to assure to persons within the jurisdiction of every State due process of law and equal protection of the laws, and to prevent the crime of lynching.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 801, with Mr. McCORMACK in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. GAVAGAN] for 3 hours and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] for 3 hours.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GAVAGAN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FISH. Do I correctly understand that the gentleman from New York has agreed to yield me half of his time?

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I have an agreement with the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] to divide my time of 3 hours evenly with him, he to control one hour and a half of the time allotted to the proponents of the bill. I ask unanimous consent that this division of the time may be in order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. In accordance with the unanimous-consent agreement, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from New York [Mr. GAVAGAN] for 1½ hours, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] for 1½ hours, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] for 3 hours.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself sufficient time to make this preliminary statement:

Mr. Chairman, in the consideration of the bill, when the point of reading the bill for amendment under the 5-minute rule is reached, at the proper time I shall offer a motion to strike out, in section 2, on page 2, the entire last sentence, beginning on line 13 and ending on line 17 with the parenthesis and the period.

Mr. Chairman, I now yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as may be necessary to make a brief statement.

As I understand the parliamentary situation, this bill will be considered in general debate for the next 6 hours. There will be no vote in the House today, presumably, even if the 6 hours are consumed. Whether we can consume the entire 6 hours before 5 or 6 o'clock today is problematical, but apparently there will be no vote cast today; and speaking to those on this side primarily, it is of the utmost importance, however, that you be here tomorrow, Wednesday afternoon, at the time when amendments will be in order, so that you can protect the bill from being emasculated. It is not so essential that you stay here during the entire debate today.

Mr. Chairman, I now yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES].

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, antilynching legislation similar to that proposed here today has been before the Congress for some 20 years. It seems to me now is the time when we should dispose of this question one way or the other. I hope we can do this without passion and prejudice, that we can debate the measure as it ought to be debated, and then either vote for or against it as we see fit. However, I do want to call your attention to something that I think is rather important, and that is this: Here is a measure that has been pending before the Congress during all these years; introduced in the House and submitted to that all-powerful Judiciary Committee, composed, I think, of 25 of the leading Members of this House. It seems to me that the least that the committee could have done was to have held hearings on it and had the matter discussed pro and con, fairly and squarely on its merits, and then either recommended the passage of the bill or turned it down.

On a question of this kind, that is going to be debated fairly as to whether it is constitutional or not, we are entitled to have the fair judgment of the membership of the Judiciary Committee. We just do not have it. If committees such as the Judiciary Committee do not see fit to assume this responsibility in a case of this kind, then what are we to expect when other questions of great importance come before the Congress?

A measure similar to the one before us now passed the House some 2 years ago. It failed in the other body, not as a result of a record vote but just because a group of those who are opposed to it used the old, famous method of filibustering.

The bill is intended to prevent, insofar as possible, the inexcusable and indefensible crime of lynching. With all its provocations, and regardless of why the crime of lynching is perpetrated, it is nevertheless one of the very lowest forms of barbarism. There is certainly no excuse for this unlawful practice. It is a form of subjugation that should never be held over any people and the taking of human life in this way is nothing more nor less than the overthrowing of the law and the courts and the government itself.

Those who are opposed to the measure say that it takes power from the States. If the States perform their duty, then the Federal power is not even invoked. If the States and their subdivisions fail to perform their duty under this measure, can there be any reason why the Federal power should not be applied?

So today the colored man and the white man in the South, in the North, in the East, and in the West are asking for the same protection and the same rights that every human being within the United States is entitled to, and that is a fair and impartial trial and equal protection under the law.

This is all there is to this measure. We have confused too many times during the heat of debate the subject of murder with the subject of lynching. They are not comparable. Murder is committed by an individual or a group of individuals who are, if apprehended, brought to trial. Lynching is committed by the citizens of a community who flout the law, take it into their own hands for the purpose of meting out punishment to individuals with the desire and the intention that such persons shall not be able to receive a fair trial before the courts.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. REES of Kansas. So I believe that if you are opposed to mob violence, if you are opposed to savagery and blood-thirsty brutality on the part of enraged human beings who presume to flout the laws by inflicting death by the most brutal means that the human mind can conceive; if you think every citizen of this great country of ours, regardless of race, creed, or color, is entitled to receive protection under the law, then I believe you will support this measure.

As I stated at the beginning of my remarks, I believe we should debate this question as fairly and as impartially as we can. Then let us cast our votes for the best interests of the people of this country, in accordance with our best judgment. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, for many years, if my recollection is correct, since about 1922, this legislation has been agitated before the Congress. To use a colloquialism, I have come in collision with it about every other year since the year 1922, and it is now getting to be a somewhat old experience. During all these years I have entertained a profound conviction about it. It is a matter of knowledge among most of my colleagues that I have gone on record in opposition to these antilynching bills a good many times. Moreover, I have written letters in great numbers explaining my position to my constituents. I say this, not for the purpose of suggesting that my judgment is infallible, but rather that my conviction upon this question is deep—so deep that I find myself impelled to be separated for the moment from many men with whom I have cooperated politically in this Chamber and out of it down through the years.

Mr. Chairman, every now and then groups of citizens arise in their passions to violate the laws which they themselves have made. Sometimes the incidents of that sort are horribly distressing. Notably is this the fact in the case of lynching. When they happen, those incidents bring shame upon us all. We abhor them. We pray that they may never be repeated, and the fact that such incidents have occurred from time to time throughout the ages does not justify by any means their repetition in this modern age, much less here in America. How may we reduce their frequency? How may we bring them to an end?

Mr. Chairman, I have always believed that the people who make the laws of a community, acting, as they do, in good faith, and in their sober judgment, must in the last analysis be depended upon to see to it that the laws are obeyed. Moreover, I believe it is futile for a central power, located at great distance from the scene, to turn its weapons against a people, the people of a community, in the belief that those people can be compelled to good behavior. It is far healthier that the process of education and enlightenment and understanding be urged upon the people of a community, to the end that whatever progress they achieve shall be permanent in the enforcement of the laws which they have made for themselves. I rejoice that up to this time in our history the people of our States and of the subordinate communities within the States have shown without any doubt whatsoever a growing understanding of the horror of lynching, and by their own attitude toward that crime have achieved a very, very marked reduction in its frequency.

If my recollection is correct, time was when these regrettable and horrible incidents occurred at the rate of more than 100 per year in this beloved country of ours. Last year there were but three such incidents in the entire United States. Like all of us, I hope that that tendency will continue; but, further, I hope that as we here in the Congress consider this problem we shall brush aside from our minds the hysteria and passion of the moment and have regard for the long future and the nature of our Government.

It is not my intention to discuss the constitutional questions raised by this bill, although some of them are exceedingly interesting, even to the point, in my judgment, of being fantastic. Rather, I shall try to demonstrate why I believe it to be a futile measure that can never be enforced; that it is a snare and a delusion which will bring bitter disillusionment ultimately to multitudes of good people. In attempting to demonstrate this, I ask your indulgence while I paint the picture which would be presented to our eyes in the event of the enactment of this bill. In order to paint the picture I shall "bring it down to cases," or attempt to, to use a colloquial expression.

Mr. Chairman, I live in the county of Livingston in the State of New York. The county of Livingston is the creature of the State of New York. It derives its right to exist from the State of New York. All the power of its government and its officials is delegated to it by the State of New York and from no other. Beyond those delegated powers the government of the county may not go. I assume that very much the same situation prevails with respect to every county in every State of the Union. Now, let us assume that a lynching occurs in the county of Livingston—and it is a very, very difficult assumption under the circumstances—and it is charged that the local county officials have neglected or refused to make all diligent efforts to protect the victim. Under this bill jurisdiction over the matter is assumed by a Federal court, at the instance of the Department of Justice, with its headquarters here in Washington, and the officials of the county may be indicted and tried in that court, charged with a crime which is rated a felony under this bill, punishable by a fine not to exceed $5,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding 5 years, or by both such fine or imprisonment.

Moreover, in considering the significance of this provision we should not confine our attention solely to the county officials, for the bill by its explicit language extends the jurisdiction of the Federal court not only to the county officials but to any officer or employee of the State charged with the duty or possessing the authority under State law to protect a person from being lynched. Thus it will be seen that under this law it is entirely possible that not merely the sheriff of the county or the deputy sheriffs but the State police and their commanders, and even the Governor of New York, may face the felony charge in that one or the other of them has failed to exercise the power which he possesses in protecting the individual. I am not stretching this matter beyond the language of the bill, but however that may be, we here find legislation proposed to the effect that the Federal Government, acting through its Department of Justice and through the Federal court, may come into a county of a State or to the capital of a State and imprison county or State officials for neglect of duty. Incidentally, everyone knows the crime involved in lynching, however it may be denominated in the Criminal Code, is forbidden by the law of every State.

But the bill does not stop there. It provides that the county in which the crime has been committed shall be held liable to pay liquidated damages to the relatives of the victim in sums varying from $2,000 to $10,000, and under the terms of the bill the county will be called upon to pay such sum as fixed by a Federal judge within the limits prescribed. The question immediately arises, How is this money to be collected? If the Federal authorities go to the county treasurer and demand the money from him, they will be met with the assertion, which cannot be gainsaid, that the county treasurer has no right under the laws of the State of New York to pay over the money. He may pay out money from the county treasury only in conformance with appropriations made by the county board of supervisors, which corresponds in the State of New York to county commissioners in the counties of many States, or in accordance with some special State law, and for no other reason. Encountering this obstacle, we may assume that the Federal authorities will then go to the board of supervisors and demand of the board an appropriation out of the county treasury to meet the judgment. They will thereupon be met with the reminder, the correctness of which cannot be denied, that the board of supervisors of the county cannot under New York State law appropriate any money out of the county treasury except for purposes made legitimate by New York State law; and as the State law does not authorize expenditures for judgments inflicted by Federal courts, the supervisors cannot make the appropriation. Whereupon, under this bill, the county treasurer and the members of the board of supervisors may be held in contempt of the Federal court.

There is a spectacle for you—county officials obeying the laws of their States are to be in contempt of a Federal court on the ground that the order of the Federal court inflicting a judgment upon a county within a State is a lawful order. Being guilty of contempt, they may be fined or imprisoned, or both.

Am I wrong, Mr. Chairman, when I assert that if any such practice is to be established and sustained the Federal Government can hereafter employ its power to destroy the government of a county? And even in that case, the money will not have been collected. In all seriousness, I ask the proponents of this measure do they think we have reached a point in our political and social development at which it shall be deemed wise and in accordance with the spirit of our institutions for the Federal Government to step in over the borders of a sovereign State and punish a county, the creature of the State? Am I exaggerating when I say that such a thing is fantastic and can never be enforced in our scheme of government? The plain fact is, the whole process will die aborning. The instant the Federal Government attempts to apply the provisions of this bill it will encounter insuperable obstacles. I do not believe that such a law could survive the light of day in a single court of this land, unless, indeed—and I always make this reservation in these modern days—unless, indeed, the courts have reached the conclusion that there is no longer such a thing as a Federal union of sovereign States under the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, at this moment I am not protesting against the motives of the authors of this bill. I protest rather against its utter futility. Its passage by the House misleads multitudes of people who will wake up to recognize it, if it is ever enacted and its enforcement attempted, as a gigantic fraud. I hate to see the Congress pass legislation, whatever the motives behind it, which will end up in bitter disillusionment. We do infinite harm when we legislate in that fashion.

I intimated at the beginning of my remarks my conviction that slowly but surely this terrible problem as manifested by lynching is solving itself. I know full well we are disconcerted at times by news of these incidents which reaches us, but we ought to be tremendously gratified that such incidents are becoming less and less frequent.

The growing infrequency of these incidents should persuade us that a self-governing people, an intelligent people, need not be driven into moral conduct by the imprisonment of their officials and the imposition of fines upon the whole community. I have more faith in the efficacy of an appeal to the conscience of the people. Such an appeal with respect to lynching is proving eminently successful. More and more communities have learned to abhor this crime. Public sentiment even in those parts of the country where it has been frequent in the past is now piled high against it. Slowly but surely it is disappearing.

We may admit, I suppose, that democracy may never attain 100 percent of perfection, but you and I are confident in our belief that today ours is the best example of democracy in the world. To what is this due? It is due largely to the fact that under our form of government we trust the people of the localities to obey their own laws; that we have not encouraged this turning to Washington and asking the Federal Government to wield a club over the people of the communities. Our march toward law and order over the years has been logical and steady because the people want it so; not because they are regimented into it. We are all distressed by break-downs that occur occasionally, but let us not fly into the error of denouncing all the people in a great region, for we know that they are struggling successfully against error. The disease is not general; no longer is it general; it is sporadic, and it is being cured. When it is cured, we shall all be glad that the irresistible appeal to the conscience of mankind, not the futile exercise of extraneous force, proved to be the remedy. [Applause.]

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CREAL].

Mr. CREAL. Mr. Chairman, I have been asked a number of times since I voted 2 years ago for the antilynching bill, by some of the boys in the cloakroom, how a man south of the Mason and Dixon's line could vote for an antilynching bill. In the Kentucky Legislature we have a rule that when a man casts a vote, if he desires, he has 3 minutes to explain his vote. Here we butt in by striking out the last word. In casting my vote again for the antilynching bill, perhaps I should say it is an explanation to those who have asked my reasons or to those who might wonder about my reasons without themselves asking me.

One of my predecessors served in this House for 20 years and retired voluntarily, the Member from my district. He voted for the antilynching bill.

As an 18-year prosecutor, my chief reasons are from personal experiences, but before I mention any of them I want to mention briefly a few of the legal aspects of this bill. It was coincidental that 2 years ago I followed the gentleman from New York who has just left the floor. At that time he lamented long and loudly, "How would you collect a judgment from a county or city?" It is so simple and so unnecessary to answer that I ask you, How do private citizens collect? An adjoining county to mine voted railroad bonds. The county repudiated the bonds. The Federal court issued mandatory injunctions for those who had authority to fix levies of taxation—to levy. How do they do those things? Surely a lawyer should not ask those questions as to how a man is going to collect a judgment from any tax-gathering authority.

I am opposed to any supergovernment in any country. After all the pains and care we have taken to fix an organized government, I am opposed to any supergovernment attempting to do the Government's work. When a prosecutor, if I had a bad case in my district, and if a mob should beat me to the victim instead of letting me try him, I would regard it as a personal insult. It is a reflection upon the locality where in any place a mob does not have sufficient confidence that the constituted legal authorities will, as Blackstone said, "administer justice fully, without denial freely, without sale, and speedily, without delay." I can conceive how in the carpetbagging days, when imported judges were dilatory or overlenient—I can conceive where there may have been some justification at that time. I can conceive how in the far West, where the population preceded the building of courthouses and it was a long, long distance to court, that perhaps there might have been a reason for this sort of summary vengeance, but such conditions do not exist today in any part of this country. Even in the far West today there is no necessity for the things which might have been called a necessity in the early days. Carpetbag rule has been abolished in the Southland and their courts are absolutely in the hands of their own native sons. There is no necessity for saying that you have to do the things you did following the Civil War.

I am opposed to lynching because it violates every principle of honor and of legal procedure. The mob acts on hearsay evidence—barred by the courts of every State in the Union.

The members of the mob say, "Come on, let us go and get so and so," and they proceed to do so.

In the next place, there is the question of confessions under duress. In the next place, a body that acts as judge, jury, and executioner would not fill a jury box because the members of such body would not constitute an unbiased jury. Further, the party has been deprived of his constitutional right of facing his accuser. He has been deprived of the right of defense by counsel. He has been deprived of every constitutional right guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, I do not think the fourteenth amendment was necessary. I think it is surplusage. It provides that every man is guaranteed the protection of his life, liberty, and property, that he should not be deprived of those things without due process of law. Suppose the Constitution had not so provided, what would any court in this land say if any man was deprived of his life, liberty, or property without due process of law? Would you expect to read a legal decision saying it was not lawful, but it was all right? What else could a court say even if the fourteenth amendment did not say a word about that?

You will hear some long stories here intended to excite the passions of people, but I do not think this question should be considered on that one premise, as some of our southern brethren want us to do. They will ask: "Is it right to hang a 'nigger' for raping a white woman?" The question here involved is a much broader question than that, but that seems to be the whole story here. Since 1890 in Oklahoma they hung 64 white men and 16 Negroes, a ratio of 4 to 1. In the days of the old West the stealing of a $25 plug horse or the rustling of two or three boney steers was a felony and most of the lynchings in those days were of white people. In connection with the labor troubles of this day, the "isms" and "asms" and what not, you are following a dangerous precedent when you condone in any form the fact that anybody at any time or any place has the right to take the law in his own hands.

Why not follow the system that I have in the past. When a bad case happens on Thursday, have the judge call a special grand jury for Monday. Indict the individual on Monday, and try him on Thursday, giving him the customary 3 days for preparation, and if found guilty fix the penalty.

There is the theory that mob violence has a tendency to do justice plus, that it terrorizes, and thereby has a better effect than an ordinary electrocution. Why not adopt the law we had in Kentucky which provided for electrocution except in cases of rape, in which event the execution should be by public hanging? I differ most seriously with reference to the educational effect on the would-be wrongdoers thereafter. In the case of a public hanging they came from miles around and when that public execution took place it had a more deterrent effect than 75 or 100 people dragging a man off in the dark and hanging him.

In Kentucky some 20 years ago we passed the ouster law. If a jailer or a sheriff through negligence or by connivance allows a prisoner to be taken by any mob, he is removed from office by the Governor, and do you know that we have not had one single, solitary lynching since then? The gentlemen who want to stand on State rights and advocate taking care of themselves should first put their houses in order and pass the Kentucky law providing for the ouster. And let me tell you another thing. You have not heard, nor will you ever hear, of the son, the nephew, the close neighbor, or the friend of a sheriff or jailer being taken from their custody and mobbed. Why? Because of the apprehension that is there.

This law does not provide that merely because a bunch of hoodlums in a remote part of the county hang a man that that county is responsible in the least degree, or that its officials will be molested, any more than in the case of two individuals engaging in a private altercation. He has to be in the custody of the law. He has to be under the care of some officer who violates his oath of office. There has to be a violation of the oath of office. If the investigation shows that no officers were present or did not have time to get notice, nothing will be done. The gentleman from New York stated that you could even involve the Governor of New York. If the Governor of New York was called by phone and told that a state of uprising exists which is beyond the control of the local authorities, and a request is made for help; if the Governor positively refuses and death resulted therefrom he should be tried and convicted. But if the Governor only read of it the next morning, through no stretch of the imagination could an accusing finger be pointed at him.

The local sheriffs and jailers are duly elected public officials and they know the feeling of the people the minute a man is locked up or the minute a man is in their custody. They know the temper of the people of their community. They know the kind of crime that has been committed. Common sense tells them whether or not it is necessary to take that man to another town for safekeeping.

Let us consider for a moment hearsay evidence. If hearsay evidence, when the human passions run wild, is sufficient to hang a man, I ask you, if that be the sentiment of the community, and its own officers are merely an index of that sentiment, what chance would the victim have being tried before a special term of court which would be called immediately? He would have no more chance to escape punishment than the proverbial snowball in Hades. If the feeling was that the man was guilty, and they sat in the courtroom and listened to the evidence and the jury brought in a verdict to the contrary, then you might look for a lynching to follow as a sort of common justification.

But in the places where lynchings take place, what shadow of a chance has a man to escape? None on earth. The only question is whether or not he shall die tonight, perhaps in a brutal way, or whether the majesty of the law shall be respected and he shall die next week or the week after next in a legal way. That is the only difference.

Two years ago I heard some gruesome stories told in an attempt, I suppose, to show that you, too, under like circumstances would have committed a lynching. But I have had some experiences along that line, and although I could perhaps relate 15 to 20 of them I wish to mention only 1. A county attorney in one of the counties of my district, when I was district attorney, called me to come down there and said he had two young Negro men charged with the rape of a white girl about 13 years old. I went down there and interviewed the Negroes for an hour and a half or 2 hours each. I told the attorney there was something wrong, that the story did not ring right, that I believed we had the wrong parties. However, in some States an indictment would have been returned against these men in 999 cases out of a thousand on the same evidence.

The story was this: The little girl was picking berries with her brother and her father in a bushy, grown-up field. In the middle of the day, she said, she went down to a stream and lay down flat on her stomach to take a drink. The two Negroes rushed up and grabbed her, held a hand over her mouth, and finally, after a while, after the act was accomplished, she said, the hand was released from her mouth in some way. She screamed and her little brother came to her and ran right on them because the bushes were thick.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. CREAL. The boy knew the Negroes because he had played marbles with them and had played ball with them. When he came on them they jumped up and ran. The father, being farther away, got there later. He could just see the two Negroes going over the hill but could not identify them.

A fourth witness, one outside the family, said he had passed through the berry patch an hour before this incident and had seen these two Negroes picking berries near the place where the little girl was picking.

The girl had blood down to her shoetops. She was only half a mile from the Glasgow Hospital. The father scooped her up in his arms and carried her to the hospital, where she was when I saw her. I attempted to interview her but she was reluctant to talk, so I did not press the matter.

The court met in its regular term. An indictment on the evidence I have related was returned before you could turn around and a trial date was set. The same story was repeated on the witness stand. Unfortunately, on the day I was at the hospital the doctor was absent and I did not interview him.

When the doctor, Dr. C. C. Howard, a noted surgeon and an eminent doctor, took the witness stand I asked him how much mutilation and personal injury had been done to this little girl. He smiled with a twinkle in his eye and said, "None at all." "Wasn't she carried to your hospital by her father in this bloody condition?" "Yes." "What was the trouble?" Again, with a smile, he said, "Nothing whatsoever except the regular monthly time. She is absolutely a perfect maiden in every respect." To verify this he had kept her 3 or 4 days in the hospital, and since then she had the second period. The assistant doctor verified this statement and testified that this condition was a little premature, but was not at all uncommon for a girl her age.

I called the girl out to the jury room and said, "Why did you tell me that lie?" The little girl said, "Well, I told Daddy that they didn't bother me, but he just kept on until I finally had to let him have his way." These are not exact words, but the substance of them.

Mob violence was feared before I made my trip to that town. In most places under similar circumstances two honest, hard-working, good-natured country Negro boys would have paid the penalty. They had an excellent alibi, which would have been established by the best people in town, at whose place they were working at that hour. On inquiry, the man who had passed through the field and said he had seen them picking berries was found to be an ex-convict, having been convicted some years before.

I could relate to you 25 such cases. I have seen too much of that sort of thing in my personal experience.

Do you know that you commit a double crime when you lynch a man? If he is guilty, you will have no trouble at all in proving it, especially in a hostile community. When you lynch an innocent man you have allowed the guilty one to escape and have closed the court books with the guilty one still at large.

I heard something said the other day about Stalin and Hitler. Theirs are two countries whose practices I do not care to imitate.

Those are my reasons, and I could give more if I had time to give them to you.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. If the gentleman wishes a few additional minutes, I shall be pleased to yield them to him. I yield the gentleman 3 additional minutes, Mr. Chairman. And may I say this, yielding myself half a minute, if the gentleman will permit, that you are listening to a man who has actually saved the lives of two Negroes in the South who might have been lynched. He is giving first-hand evidence.

Mr. COX. If the gentleman will yield to me, I would say he is casting a damnable reflection upon the young womanhood of the South, too.

Mr. CREAL. I will ask the gentleman one question. What lady does the gentleman have reference to?

Mr. COX. The gentleman is making the insinuation that wherever a lynching is alleged to have occurred the violation of the person of a child or a woman was not involved.

Mr. CREAL. The gentleman is a lawyer, and I have prosecuted a few cases myself. The first year I sent 128 men to the penitentiary. Two of them got out of court because I changed my mind from thinking they were guilty.

After full and due investigation the courts do make mistakes and convict innocent people, and afterwards the very ones who do so sign applications for pardon. Would you say, then, that even courts do make mistakes after full investigation that an enraged mob-jury on hearsay evidence never make a mistake? Poppycock on such argument as that, I say to the gentleman from Georgia. If the courts themselves make mistakes—and I have done it—what is a mob likely to do?

I am going to say one other thing. I have seen men soliciting mobs. Not in all cases, but in some cases, and in some parts of a mob, I want to say that the men who make up such mobs are not preachers, doctors, teachers, or lawyers, but very frequently they are composed of a bunch of people who are only a shade better than the man they are attempting to hang, because I have known them personally. They are men who are smart alecks, who want to do something and here is an opportunity to do something, an opportunity to shed blood and to perform an atrocious crime, which will be winked at by the authorities, and then be a sort of hero and have people say, "There goes that fellow who did so and so."

No lawyer or public official, taking oath to support organized, constitutional methods of trial, can offer any argument or excuse to condone in the least degree some other method of transacting that business.

It is not a race question nor a political question; anyone anywhere can be the victim of a mob.

Newly discovered evidence is of no value to a dead man.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. VORYS].

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I have had no personal experience in connection with the crime of lynching such as has just been described. The only lynching I ever knew anything about in Ohio was the lynching of a white man. I must leave to others the description of the ghastly human aspect of lynching.

It is my purpose to devote these few minutes to the legal aspects of this question.

Many who oppose in principle the un-American, yet too typically American, crime of lynching have questioned whether Congress could pass an effective, constitutional law against lynching. This bill, in my judgment, solves the problem in an effective and constitutional method.

The bill defines lynching in terms of denial of due process and equal protection of the laws. It does not directly punish murder or lynching. It does not even punish failure to prevent lynching.

It punishes by fine and imprisonment the failure of law officers "to make all diligent efforts" in preventing or prosecuting lynching.

It inflicts a civil penalty in damages against the county or city whose officers "have neglected or refused to use all diligence and powers vested in them for the protection of" the person lynched. Twenty-three States, including my own State of Ohio, have such laws, and their constitutionality has been repeatedly upheld.

It assumes no jurisdiction over private individuals. It does not displace or interfere with the jurisdiction of State courts over criminal offenses. It simply punishes the violation of the provisions of the fourteenth amendment of our Constitution.

We are sworn to uphold that Constitution. Is there anything in this bill that violates the Constitution we are sworn to uphold? Is there anything in the Constitution itself which prevents us from enforcing it?

We have a duty to decide these questions for ourselves. There was a time when it was popular for Congress to shift this entire duty to the Supreme Court. Then the Court assumed that Congress had intended to act constitutionally and upheld the law. This era of constitutional buck passing must come to an end. With the changes in personnel, and the broadening of constitutional interpretation by our Supreme Court we must return to our sworn duty of determining for ourselves whether we are complying with the letter and spirit of the Constitution.

The fourteenth amendment provides—

Nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

Section V of the fourteenth amendment provides—

The Congress shall have power to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provisions of this article.

In this bill Congress merely exercises its "power to enforce by appropriate legislation the provisions of" the fourteenth amendment. There is no violation of State's rights for no State has a right, through its officials, to deny equal protection to citizens by denying to some of them all process of law.

I want now to quote from decisions of famous justices of our Supreme Court on the meaning of the fifth section of the fourteenth amendment to our Constitution:

It was said in Ex parte Virginia (100 U. S. 339, p. 347):

A State acts by its legislative, its executive, or its judicial authorities. It can act in no other way. The constitutional provision, therefore, must mean that no agency of the State, or of the officers or agents by whom its powers are exerted, shall deny to any person within its jurisdiction, the equal protection of the laws. Whoever, by virtue of public position under State government, deprives another of property, life, or liberty, without due process of law, or denies or takes away the equal protection of the laws, violates the constitutional inhibition.

In Virginia v. Rives (100 U. S. 313) it was said (p. 318):

The prohibitions of the amendment extend to all actions of the State denying equal protection of the laws, whether it be action by one of these agencies or by another. Congress, by virtue of the fifth section of the fourteenth amendment, may enforce prohibitions whenever they are disregarded by either the legislative, the executive, or the judicial department of the State. The mode of enforcement is left to its discretion.

In Yick Wo v. Hopkins (118 U. S. 356):

Though the law itself be fair on its face and impartial in appearance, yet, if it is applied and administered by public authority with an evil eye and an unequal hand, so as practically to make unjust and illegal discriminations between persons in similar circumstances, material to their rights, the denial of equal justice is still within the prohibition of the Constitution.

It has been said that there is something in the Constitution or in our system of government that prevents our inflicting of penalties on counties for violations of the Constitution.

The leading case on this question is County of Lincoln v. Luning (133 U. S. 529), wherein Mr. Justice Brewer disposed of the question of a violation of the eleventh amendment by permitting suit against a county, saying:

It is claimed that because the county is an integral part of the State it could not, under the eleventh amendment of the Federal Constitution, be sued in the circuit court.

With regard to the first objection, it may be observed that the records of this Court for the last 30 years are full of suits against counties, and it would seem as though by general consent the jurisdiction of the Federal courts in such suits had been established. But irrespective of this acquiescence, the jurisdiction of the circuit courts is beyond question. The eleventh amendment limits the jurisdiction only as to suits against a State.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I wonder if the gentleman has looked into the law of Wyoming on that point? I happened to run into a case of that sort personally involving a matter in Wyoming, and I found that the courts of Wyoming hold that Wyoming counties are creatures of the State government and entitled to the sovereignty of a State.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. If there is any such decision, I am not familiar with it, and it is out of line with the uniform decisions throughout the land. For instance, the case of Ward v. Love County (253 U. S. 17) was a case where the Supreme Court held that in collecting taxes on a federally exempted allotment the county had deprived Indians of property without due process of law; and although the money had been used, the county was required to reimburse the Indians the full amount wrongfully taken.

There is an example of where the Federal courts step in to enforce through their processes a collection against a county in order to uphold the provisions of the Federal Constitution.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. If the gentleman will again yield on that point, I am familiar with cases of that type, and that would be true in my State of South Dakota, because there the counties are created by the voluntary acts of the people who make up the county; but the Wyoming law, it seems, is different in that they hold there that the counties are creatures of the State legislature, or creatures of the sovereign government of the State, and consequently enjoy the immunity of the State.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. I can only read from the case of the County of Lincoln against Luning, to which I have already referred, the words of Mr. Justice Brewer, as follows:

While the county is territorially a part of the State, yet politically it is also a corporation created by and with such powers as are given to it by the State. In this respect it is a part of the State only in that remote sense in which a city, town, or other municipal corporation may be said to be a part of the State.

Unless there is a peculiar law applicable in Wyoming, I would think this law would apply equally to all counties throughout the country. Subdivisions of a State can be held responsible under our Constitution for neglect or refusal of their officials to prevent lynching. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has again expired.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 30 minutes.

In times like these, with problems national and international such as we have now, I wonder what impression this proceeding would create in the mind of an individual sitting in the galleries looking upon this scene, studying his House of Representatives in action. A bill is brought into the House that proposes to subject to Federal control the police agencies of the States—a bill which violates the provisions of the Constitution of the United States in order to attempt to do it; a bill which violates the fundamental natural law of democratic government, which we are so loudly proclaiming our interest in preserving. It is a bill which comes here without any necessity in point of reason, even from the standpoint of its advocates, only one lynching last year out of each 43,405,000 people.

Besides, there is not a human being on the floor of this House—on either side of the House—who does not know that the one thing most responsible for the record which is shown by that chart which I have had brought on the floor is the fact that the people of the communities of this country have had entire, exclusive responsibility for the suppression of mob violence.

I challenge anybody on the floor of this House to point to a single major offense that has been reduced as rapidly as that chart shows the offense of lynching has been reduced. Do not forget that. I challenge anybody on the floor of this House and in this hour, when democratic government is being challenged all over the earth, to deny what this chart shows. Those who advocate this bill would have this House, by its vote, testify to the world that the institution of democracy, the States, and their subdivisions—the only possible agencies of government under our system through which a democracy can function—have failed and Uncle Sam has to step in. Why do you do it? What is the reason for bringing this bill out at a time when every statesman, when every patriotic citizen, knows that we need a united people in America? [Applause.]

What is the reason for bringing in this bill now, in this hour, to take up the time of the House and the Senate when there is not a man or woman on the floor of this House who does not know that the public business of this country requires all the time that we can give to it? Is there a human being on the floor of this House who does not know that when this bill reaches the Senate of the United States it will be held there to consume time and time and time, divide our people, stir up bad feeling, consume time that ought to be devoted to the country's serious business, testify against the efficiency of democratic government, while a poor gesture is made to a deceived constituency.

The thing which I regret most is this attempted new concentration of Federal power—this testimony of the great House of Representatives—that democratic institutions in the United States have failed, and that it is required that the great Federal Government shall step in and be given the power to take the officers of a State from their business and send them to the penitentiary, because, forsooth, they have not carried out a congressional edict.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Not now.

Mr. FISH. I have a question that I would like the gentleman to answer.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Oh, the gentleman will have plenty of time to answer his own question, and he cannot answer any question that I have put. It would take more time than the gentleman has to answer these questions. I will leave that to the House when the gentleman gets through.

A MEMBER. Speak louder; we cannot hear you; get before the microphone.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Oh, I despise this talking into a knothole worse than anybody. Mr. Chairman, I can understand how people feel about this lynching business. I think I understand how the colored people feel about the one which occurred down in Mississippi, at Duck Hill, some 2 years ago, for instance. I had a feeling that I would like to go down there and do business with them. But, Mr. Chairman, ours is the responsibility of statesmen; we have a governmental responsibility.

We have to be governed on the floor of this House by those things which judgment dictates to the statesmanship of this country. I want to stop lynching. Do we want to stop lynching? Then why this bill, that injects the Federal Government into a situation which has all but been finished, lessening the sense of local responsibility? Honest to God, man to man, do we want to stop lynching in this country? Do you not know as a matter of horse sense that when a person is in danger of lynching the only protection he can ever have is the protection afforded by the community in the place where the danger arises? As a matter of horse sense, there is not anybody who has not sense enough to know that—even a Republican.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Oh, four or five of us will vote with you.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, we know that in order to have dependability you have to have responsibility. You do not have to read a lot of books to know that. You know that in order that these communities shall best discharge their duty to people in danger of being lynched they must have the responsibility for doing so. Nobody has done more than I have toward suppressing lynching in this country. When this lynching in Mississippi took place I sent a red-hot telegram down there. A fellow sent me a letter and said that I could not go down to Mississippi and say what I had said in that telegram. I did not know but what I might want to go down to Mississippi sometime, and I did not want to go down there if it was dangerous. Just to try it out, I went down there and made the same sort of a speech as was my telegram. I did not get shot or run out of the county. I know how to talk to those people. They are my people. I am the son of a Confederate soldier. I have a right to talk to them. I have made this fight here for a long time. I know what I can give them, and I gave it to them.

A man down in Memphis, I think, wrote me, and he was raising Cain about what I had said. I wrote back to him and told him I was born in Texas and I had a perfect right to say what I had said. He wrote back and said, "Oh, excuse me; I thought you were from Pennsylvania." [Applause and laughter.] Mr. Chairman, we are dealing with human nature in this matter, and human nature is nine-tenths of every equation in which human beings have to act; and I tell you there is nobody on the floor of this House who has not sense enough to know that when you have the Federal Government intervene and attempt to coerce those people who know they have a difficult situation on their hands, that you lessen the sense of local responsibility, and when you do that you imperil the people in danger of being lynched. We are talking horse sense, and that is why we are fighting this bill. I am not running for President, like my distinguished Republican friend back there thinks he is. I like him, too. He does the best that he can. If he had more sense, he would not be supporting this bill. I can appreciate just how he feels about it. But look at this chart. It shows that in the decade between 1882 and 1892 there was an annual average of 155.8 lynchings—1 lynching out of every 380,000; from 1893 to 1903, an annual average of 133.1 lynchings—1 out of 555,000; from 1904 to 1914, 69 lynchings—1 out of 1,308,000; from 1915 to 1925, 50.3 lynchings—1 out of 2,129,000; from 1926 to 1936, 16.4 lynchings—1 out of 7,468,000; for the year 1936, 8 lynchings—1 out of 16,053,000; for 1937, 8 lynchings—1 out of 16,157,000; 1938, 6 lynchings—1 out of 21,702,500; and 1939, 3 lynchings—1 out of 43,405,000. Here are the statistics from 1892 to 1939, inclusive, showing the year, population, number of persons lynched, populations per person lynched, and number lynched per million population:

These figures put to shame the pretended belief of the advocates of this bill that there is any need or even excuse for this proceeding which does no credit to the House of Representatives. It certainly adds nothing to the assurance of the people that they have public servants here to whom they may safely entrust the business and guardianship of a great republic in these times when only real statesmen can meet the challenge of their responsibility. I do not mean to be offensive but I believe that must be the public's reaction. Look at these figures; face your conscience and tell yourself the truth once; do you believe that any agency of government could have done better than has been done in these communities with this difficult situation? Of course, lynching had to stop. All the way from the Atlantic to the Pacific population preceded organized government, and home-made government preceded organized government. This is the key to understanding the "why" of lynching in America. When these pioneers got over into communities that were beyond the reach of the sheriff and the legislature, the most perfect functioning democracies in the history of all time sprang up. They executed people for violating home-made laws.

That sort of government did not fade out of the picture until this other government—organized government—came in and established itself. When you check on those communities where lynchings have occurred in later years, you will find that organized police protection has not extended into them 9 times out of 10. People there are accustomed to doing their own protecting. Now, as roads have been developed, as organized government has been extended, as people have become conscious of the fact that no longer do pioneers sit in judgment, men who were instinctively honest and just, that other form, home-made government, is fading out. It is true, no doubt, that hoodlums now largely make up the mobs, and the people are stopping them. Does anybody brag on the people for what they are doing? Does anybody praise them? Is there anybody here, favoring this bill, who claims to believe in democracy, who points with pride to those democratic institutions that are under popular control? Who praises them? Who reduced lynching last year to 1 in nearly 50,000,000 people? It almost makes one wonder if a few—not many, of course—of these advocates are not almost sorry the States and their communities have done so well.

Some Members stand on the floor of the House and do their best, it seems, to create the impression that the States and their communities have not done their job. Of course, three is too many. But last year there was only 1 lynching for every 43,405,000 people. Yet you bring in this bill and pretend to the American Nation that you honestly believe there is necessity for this invasion of the exclusive responsibility of the States. You ought to be ashamed of yourselves, and I think my friend is. I will bet he goes to confession, or something, about it. [Laughter.]

Mr. GAVAGAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. GAVAGAN. I assure the gentleman that I take full advantage of the faith of my fathers.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Well, use some of their sense next time, and come here and help beat this bill. [Laughter.] Faith without works is dead. Somebody said something like that.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes, I will, because I like the gentleman.

Mr. GAVAGAN. I am trying to perform the admonition to work for, besides having faith in, the passage of this bill.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes, we believe in the honesty of your purpose—no, the honesty of your efforts. There is a little difference.

Now, this remarkable bill is brought in here with the clear-cut condemnation of the Supreme Court resting against each of its provisions. My distinguished friend, a moment ago, made some reference to suits against counties. Why, of course. Where States possess the police powers of our system of government, State legislatures may enact a law, constitutionally, levying a fine against a county; but no such power rests in the Federal organization.

Now, let us see about this organization of our Government a minute. I am not, trying to talk in sequence. I am not trying to make a speech, but I am saying some things that the people of America are going to begin to think about if we are to preserve the structure and distributed responsibility and governmental capacity and virility of the people essential to the preservation of true democracy. We may think we can continue to do what an interested minority wants to do, to the destruction of this great democracy of ours, and get by with it, but we do know that unless the body of the people supporting fundamental principles stand against the pressure of these minorities we must go the way of the other democracies of the world. The time cannot be far distant when the people who do that thing will have to answer to the people who believe in the preservation of a democratic system of government. Governments, like all other things, are subject to the law of cause and effect. People cannot do things which are destructive of democratic government and escape the reasonable and probable consequences of their conduct.

You cannot preserve a democratic system of government unless you preserve the governmental responsibility of the individual citizen of that system. All progress in a democratic system of government is in that direction which moves governmental power and responsibility closer and closer to the people. This bill moves in the opposite direction. It is not like the ordinary extension of Federal power, which at least holds to a respectful attitude toward the States. This is an impudent, arrogant assertion of governmental overlordship over the States and the governmental power to prosecute the States and their officials for their failure to carry out the Federal edict.

We are all "het-up" about what the "reds" are doing. I hold no brief for them, but here is where the real job is being done. We are taking these powers away from the States, concentrating them in a great Federal bureaucracy. When the problems of government exceed the governmental capacity of the people, then democracy must fade out of the picture. Is it not strange that this people are deaf to this solemn warning of history and of common sense? Here we are, all "het-up" about what the "reds" are doing, while we are taking governmental responsibility away from the smaller units of government, and doing it under the pretense of necessity, in the face of figures like this. There are the results—only three lynchings in a year in this Nation. Are you sorry it is so small?

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I believe I will.

Mr. FISH. I thank my good friend.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I know it. I am for the gentleman.

Mr. FISH. The gentleman is one of the greatest exponents of the Constitution, and very sincere. The gentleman talks about these three lynchings. The gentleman made the identical speech when there were 33 and 63.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. That is right. That is exactly right. Now, do not grin too much, because I am going to hit you one. [Laughter.] I made the speech because we were in process of reduction, and I told you then on the floor of this House that if you would leave us alone we would continue to reduce.

I want to say something more. If you had succeeded in passing this monstrous bill back in 1922 and lynchings had been reduced to three, you would have been hollering your head off about the inefficiency of the States and the glorious achievement of the Federal Government. That is what is destroying this democracy—a Nation of people afflicted with "Federalitis," deploring concentration of governmental power, and belittling the result of State and community achievement and hollering for Uncle Sam to butt in on a situation which for actual achievement has no parallel among the records of crime suppression. As I see it, the sponsors of this bill are trying here to rob the smaller units of government of that to which they are entitled in order that credit may go to the Federal Government for that which has already been achieved. That is one of the real big things in this bill.

Gentlemen, the States about which you talk so much, the States you claim you want to preserve, have accomplished this thing themselves; but you come in here howling for an extension of the Federal power to destroy independent sovereignty of these States, the very ones you profess a desire to preserve. What is left of State sovereignty, if State officials operate under the threat of Federal prosecution for a failure to perform their State duties as per the Federal edict? It makes no difference about facts in any case. We are talking about the allocation of governmental power under our system of government. What have you got to say to that? Nothing. You cannot say anything to it.

We are afraid of the "reds." We are destroying this great democracy under the dome of this Capitol. That is where it is happening. A few followers of soap-box orators cannot do anything. We can do it, however. We send out the word from here beneath the dome of this Capitol to the American people, out to the world, that you cannot depend upon the States; you have got to have the Federal Government supervising them doing everything; and you do it in the face of the fact that belies the statements of necessity.

I say this in all kindness, but you go around here making the same kind of argument that was made in support of Hitler, Mussolini, and Stalin. You ought to be ashamed of it, for you know better. It will not get you anything in this next election, for the people are getting sense today. They have been foolish, but they are getting smart. The people of this country are becoming concerned for the preservation of this great system of government. Let me trace it for you; let me see if I can get the picture across.

A long time ago, back in the first century, we see where our system was functioning. Tacitus tells us that, while the leader had a right to present the matter and had the opportunity to persuade, the people spoke the voice of government—these people that gathered in from the forests of Germany. A few centuries after that we see the same system of government still operating; we see the government of the hundred, the government of the shire, the government of the city, the government of the borough—those great breeding places, those great nourishers and developers of democratic capacity to govern—local governments.

Then we watched the most magnificent struggle in the history of the ages when those people who had developed governmental capacity in those smaller units of government met the king, the concentrated power and they compelled him to decentralize—to yield to them the Habeas Corpus Act, the Magna Carta, the Petition of Rights, the Bill of Rights, the Acts of Settlement; and finally we wrote the great Declaration of Independence. Long before we had written the Declaration of Independence, however, those institutions of local democratic government were thoroughly rooted in American soil in the Colonies. In the main they functioned through the smaller units of government. When that time came, the period of the Revolution, the royal representatives ran away and the people filled in their places. The government of the Colony became the government of the State, and it did not miss a beat.

Those governments of the States are the only possible—and I make this statement and challenge the world to contradict it—under the American system of government the States are the only possible agencies through which a democracy may function. [Applause.] We are destroying them. When the time came when these States recognized that they had need for a common agency to do some things for them which the States separately could not so well do, these 13 independent sovereignties met in Philadelphia through their representatives. Those representatives had no commission to create a government; they were the creatures of a government of 3 coordinate branches functioning through distributed agencies like communities, municipalities, and the smaller units of government. They had no notion then that they had given to this agency of theirs the power to send their Governors and their other officers to jail. They never dreamed in those days that their posterity would ever stand under the dome of their Capitol and ask the privilege of putting on the statute books of the Federal Government a law that would subject these States to the domination of this agency of theirs. This is no time to be playing with great responsibilities.

There is not a man or woman of intelligence and information in America who looks into the eyes of his child and feels with absolute certainty that he or she can transmit to that child the opportunity to live under a free government. I do not know of a man or woman in America facing the future and contemplating the present who can be certain that he will be able to bequeath to his child the privilege of being free. I am not an alarmist. I am not an optimist or a pessimist. These people, especially if they get professional, are neither optimists nor pessimists. They are merely foolish. Sensible people seek to know the facts and to arrive at a sound judgment.

When these States sent those men to that convention and those men functioned, and the document was drawn up—and this delegated certain responsibilities to their common agent—listen to me, men and women! That document as amended provided that the powers not given to the Federal agency, and which the States had not in the document denied to themselves, were reserved to the States and to the people. They reserved this power that you are now trying to rob the States of; they reserved it. There is no doubt about that.

I want to call attention briefly to the fourteenth amendment, adopted in 1868. Soon after that the Supreme Court was called on to construe the fourteenth amendment. The first great opinion was the Slaughterhouse cases. I quote from that decision:

It would be the vainest show of learning to attempt to prove by citations of authority that up to the adoption of the recent amendments no claim or pretense was set up that those rights depended on the Federal Government for their existence or protection, beyond the very few express limitations which the Federal Constitution imposed upon the States—such, for instance, as the prohibition against ex post facto laws, bills of attainder, and laws impairing the obligation of contracts. But with the exception of these and a few other restrictions, the entire domain of the privileges and immunities of citizens of the States, as above defined, lay within the constitutional and legislative power of the States, and without that of the Federal Government.

Then the Court asked this question:

Was it the purpose of the fourteenth amendment, by the simple declaration that no State should make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States, to transfer the security and protection of all the civil rights which we have mentioned, from the State to the Federal Government? And where it is declared that Congress shall have the power to enforce that article, was it intended to bring within the power of Congress the entire domain of civil rights heretofore belonging exclusively to the States?

The Court answered that question, as follows:

When the effect is to fetter and degrade the State governments by subjecting them to the control of Congress, in the exercise of powers heretofore universally conceded to them of the most ordinary and fundamental character; when in fact it radically changes the whole theory of the relations of the State and Federal Governments to each other and of both these governments to the people, the argument has a force that is irresistible, in the absence of language which expresses such a purpose too clearly to admit of doubt.

Near the close of his opinion, Mr. Justice Miller uses this significant language:

Under the pressure of all the excited feeling growing out of the war our statesmen have still believed that the existence of the States with powers for domestic and local government, including the regulation of civil rights—the rights of person and of property—was essential to the perfect working of our complex form of government.

This bill undertakes to do the specific thing which the Supreme Court in its first pronouncement on the fourteenth amendment said could not be done.

It was not intended—

Said the Court—

to fetter and degrade the State governments by subjecting them to the control of Congress, in the exercise of powers heretofore universally conceded to them of the most ordinary and fundamental character.

Members of Congress in the first instance must be the judges of the limitations imposed upon them by the Constitution. We took an oath to support the Constitution, and if the Constitution itself indicates we may not do something, and if the Supreme Court, our court of last resort, passing upon the question states we may not do it, then Members of Congress of necessity must desist from doing so.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 additional minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I want to direct attention now to the next decision, and I hope the Members will examine these decisions carefully. I will skip two or three, but I would like to direct attention to a decision in the case of United States v. Harris (106 U. S., p. 629). This was a lynching case.

Harris and 19 others were indicted for taking from the custody of a deputy sheriff a number of persons. It was charged that the prisoners had been duly arrested, were then and there in the custody of a deputy sheriff of said county, were entitled to due and equal protection of the laws thereof; that the said R. G. Harris and 19 others, naming them, with certain other persons, did then and there unlawfully conspire together and take these prisoners from the custody of the officers, beating, bruising, wounding, and otherwise ill-treating them, contrary to the form of the statute.

That is the identical kind of a case that would arise under this bill as it was presented at the last Congress. That prosecution was under section 5519 of the first Civil Rights Act. I do not like to discuss constitutional questions in this way, but I have to hurry along. After quoting the authorities in the Slaughterhouse cases, the Cruikshank case, and Virginia against Rives, the Court said:

These authorities show conclusively that the legislation under consideration finds no warrant for its enactment in the fourteenth amendment. * * * In the indictment in this case, for instance, which would be a good indictment under the law if the law itself were valid, there is no intimation that the State of Tennessee has passed any law or done any act forbidden by the fourteenth amendment. On the contrary, the gravamen of the charge against the accused is that they conspired to deprive certain citizens of the United States and of the State of Tennessee of the equal protection accorded them by the laws of Tennessee.

Concluding, the Court says:

It was never supposed that the section under consideration conferred on Congress the power to enact a law which would punish a private citizen for an invasion of the rights of his fellow citizen conferred by the State of which they were both residents on all its citizens alike. We have, therefore, been unable to find any constitutional authority for the enactment of section 5519 of the Revised Statutes. The decisions of this court above referred to leave no constitutional ground for the act to stand on.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Does not the gentleman concede that this law does not attempt to punish private citizens at all; therefore it is clearly distinguishable from the law which was objected to in the Harris case?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. As I understand this bill, it proposes to punish private citizens who engage in mob violence.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. There is no such provision in the bill. It provides for punishment of an officer and a county, but clearly avoids the objection that was raised in the Harris case by not applying to private individuals at all.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I was not advised of that change from the Gavagan bill of last session. The gentleman concedes that under the Constitution there could be no punishment of a private citizen who conspired to commit mob violence?

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. It is the law that even a private citizen is under the duty and has the authority to protect any individual from any violence that might be threatened him.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I make the statement upon the responsibility of my judgment, without taking further time, that no power rests in the Government of the United States to punish private citizens, to punish officers of a State or the subdivision of a State, or to levy a fine against a county for any of the things that are prohibited in this bill.

There is an interesting and a very distinct thing about the present bill. It specifically exempts labor organizations from the operation of the bill.

Mr. FISH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FISH. It is my understanding that the gentleman from New York [Mr. GAVAGAN], author of this bill, proposes to offer an amendment to do away with that clause.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. It is a very interesting thing, and is in the picture. As the States and communities move out insofar as lynchings are concerned, and they are about out, it looks to the casual observer as though those whom Mr. GAVAGAN exempted in his bill, will be the ones directly in front of the gun if he passes his bill and it is held constitutional.

If you establish the power in the Federal Government to prosecute in those instances indicated in this bill, that same power is a power to prosecute the officers of States, municipalities, and communities in every instance where there is violence either to persons or property. Does anybody challenge that?

Mr. KITCHENS. That is what I was about to ask.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Well, I just said it. I will show you where you are going. We are getting out from under. There have been only three lynchings in the last year. We are about out from under.

There is no distinction in the fourteenth amendment between the protection of persons and the protection of property. If this power which you seek to rest in the Federal Government is established and recognized by the Supreme Court, by that establishment and recognition you put it within the power of the Federal Government to prosecute for every violation of the rights of persons and property where you can develop a failure of equal protection. Under that theory, the fact that the thing happens in effect is evidence that there has been a failure of equal protection. Nothing in the fourteenth amendment deals with mob violence. There is no distinction between violence by a mob and by one person.

This is what you who have been hollering your heads off about States' rights are trying to do by this bill. You are trying to establish as a part of the governmental philosophy a power of the Federal Government—a governmental overlordship on the part of the Federal Government—to enact legislation and to prosecute in every instance where there is a failure to accord what you call equal protection of either property or person in the United States. This mob business has nothing to do with it.

I ask you, man to man, is there anybody on the floor of this House who, in the first place, believes that that constitutional power is given to the Federal Government, or who would be willing to have it recognized and established, even if it is given to it? Yet that is what you are doing, and I want to warn you. There may come a time when we who have been bearing the brunt of this thing will get tired and step aside, and there might come a time when a Supreme Court of the United States would not have any more sense than to hold this power constitutional. We will be out. It will be just retribution—just exactly what you deserve.

We are standing here fighting now to protect the States and their communities and their people against the establishment of this unnatural, unreasonable, and monstrous Federal power. You are trying to force it on us and you are going to force it on yourselves.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. Has the gentleman any doubt whatever in his mind as to what a Supreme Court brought up to date would find on the question of the constitutionality?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I do not want to discuss that.

Mr. KNUTSON. None whatever.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I do not want to discuss that.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. GAVAGAN. I dislike to break into the gentleman's remarks.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I would not let the gentleman do so if I were not willing; go ahead.

Mr. GAVAGAN. If I understand the argument of the gentleman, the gentleman's answer to the gentleman from Georgia is that he is fearful that the Supreme Court as now constituted may uphold the constitutionality of this proposed legislation?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I did not say that.

Mr. GAVAGAN. I understood the gentleman to say it.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I cannot help the gentleman's understanding.

Mr. GAVAGAN. I am sorry if I misunderstood the gentleman. I would like the gentleman to clear it up.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. It is clear. It may not be clear in the gentleman's head but it is clear.

Mr. KITCHENS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. KITCHENS. The title of this bill is, "To assure to persons within the jurisdiction of every State due process of law and equal protection of the laws." Suppose I have a neighbor who is shot down in cold blood by two men, and that I have another neighbor who is mobbed. Under this bill we are going to give them equal protection of the law. We are going to reward the heirs of the man who was mobbed, and leave to suffer the heirs and family of the man who, innocent, was murdered in cold blood. I would like to know if this is equal protection of the law.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. The thing is perfectly monstrous insofar as helping to attain the results they claim.

We are trying to stop mob violence. We are stopping mob violence. I tell you this proposed law would not help us.

In Williamson County, in my State, in a Bohemian settlement one morning a family went to the field and left a 14-year-old girl at home. She was not well. They came back at noon that day and found the child weltering in her own blood. The countryside was aroused. They found a man on the railroad track about 3 miles away and took him into the village. Someone said, "This is the man who is responsible for that condition. He has blood on his person." They examined him and found he was clotted with blood. They killed him.

This happened in a community that did not have police protection. There was not a man there who did not know that it was mere accident that it had not happened to his child rather than to his neighbor's child. Suppose this law had been in effect. I happen to know that after the people were calm they were ashamed of their action. The community began to bring pressure on this. Every time you get a community right on this mob suppression it spreads from community to community. The big thing about this method is that the people have changed. It is getting to be a matter of pride in my country to stop this sort of action. Suppose this law had been in effect, however. The Federal marshal would have come in there and taken the father and brothers and neighbors of that child to a Federal court and sent them to a Federal jail. He would have taken the officers, anyhow.

Mr. FISH. The gentleman knows that is not in the bill. The officers, yes; but not the father and brothers. The gentleman does not want that statement to remain in the RECORD, does he? The gentleman is essentially a fair man.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. That is right; they are taken out.

These folks who are behind this bill have gotten scared of the bill and have begun to trim it down; just want to leave enough in the bill to get by the next election, and they can do just as well with taking the folks out and leaving the officers in there; in fact, that is better. There are just a few officers and a whole lot of folks. They took the labor people out also, but the trouble there probably was that exempting them from the operation of the bill rather turned the spotlight on them, and there is not much doubt that the suggestion came down from headquarters to turn off the spotlight. I would not be much surprised that around these headquarters are some smart people who can see a very clear probability that if this bill is passed and held constitutional, its application will be quite a bit broader than has been mentioned by the proponents of the bill.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 additional minute.

Suppose then they had levied a fine of $10,000 to go to the family that had raised a rapist, as is provided in this bill. The parents—and this is where the parents come in—and the kinfolk of that little kid would have had to pay a part of the $10,000. Do you mean to tell me that that would help the people there who are trying to stop this thing? We know what we are doing. Why do you not leave us alone? Look at the results. Down to three in 1 year. Why do you not brag on us a little bit? Why do you not give us a chance to stop this thing? It is our job, it is our responsibility. We are ashamed of it. We can talk to our people. Why do you not keep the Federal Government out and let us stop this thing? But you will not do that. Why? For the same reason, and I say this in all kindness. The mob batters at the door of the jail and whispers to the sheriff, "political expediency," and he lets them have the prisoner.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 more minute.

And today the Constitution stands between this Congress and the right to pass this bill. You are opposed to mob violence, and so on, while we are trying to stop mobs from lynching people, and sheriffs from yielding for political expediency. Suppose we get together before voting time and see to it there is going to be no lynching of the Constitution, whether for political expediency or not. I know this is a difficult situation for many of you. I can understand how many colored people feel about it. I understand how some of your communities feel about it. You are good fellows. I do not want to see any vacancies over there, and every one of you who can vote to support the Constitution and get back here at the next election give us a vote, will you not, boys? [Laughter and applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 minute.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] has just made a very able defense of State rights and State sovereignty, but never in the entire history of our country have we ever had such an example of dominance by the Federal Government of the States and interference with State rights and State sovereignty as we have had under the New Deal, and the gentleman himself has voted with them on many occasions. It is enough to make the angels laugh.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Certainly.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I make this statement and I do not brag about it. I have as good a record as any man in this House in voting against the concentration of power in the Federal Government, and if the gentleman will check up, he will find that is so.

Mr. FISH. Well, I am proud of the gentleman, and I hope the gentleman will continue that record.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION].

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I was very much interested in the splendid speech of our distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee, but I cannot agree with him. This legislation first came to the House in 1922, under what is known as the Dyer antilynching bill. Mr. Dyer was from Missouri. That bill was referred to the Judiciary Committee of the House and after a very careful study of the bill by many very able lawyers they made a favorable report to the House and clearly pointed out that the measure was constitutional. The House then, on January 25, 1922, took up the bill, and that was when I had my first opportunity to speak and vote on this legislation.

On January 28, 1922, the House passed the bill by a vote of 231 to 119. The bill went to the Senate and was referred to the Senate Judiciary Committee, and on that Judiciary Committee of the Senate were some of the ablest constitutional lawyers in this country. They made a favorable report and asserted that the proposed legislation was constitutional, but when it came up in the Senate the distinguished Democratic floor leader from Alabama started a filibuster, and the bill failed in the Senate on account of the filibuster.

So, in 1934, our Democratic friends in the Senate introduced antilynching bills and they were considered by the Senate Judiciary Committee, and Democrats and Republicans reported the measure favorably as being constitutional. Similar bills were introduced in the House, but the Judiciary Committee of the House was so constituted that the Judiciary Committee of the House took no action and the bill did not come to the House floor for action.

Our good friend and distinguished lawyer who has just preceded me here has through all the years opposed this legislation. Now, it seems to me that the opponents of the legislation seek to present a case that does not exist. They assume that this is an attack on the South. I come from what is known as a Southern State. It is true that we have had more lynchings in the South than any other part of the Union—about 95 percent of the lynchings have been in the 12 Southern States—but this bill is directed to the whole country and brings protection to every citizen in every State in the Union.

It is a sad commentary that over a period of 50 years we have had over 5,000 lynchings in the United States, and there can be no more unnecessary, cruel, or greater crime than the crime of lynching. It overturns the Constitution and laws of the United States and of the States, overturns the courts and the officials of the Government, and anarchy reigns supreme.

Mr. Chairman, this measure is calculated to stop that condition in the United States. Of course, in the State of Kentucky, and in the Southern States it has been urged over a period of years that lynching was necessary to protect the sanctity of the home and the virtue of our women. We are all interested in the sanctity of the home and the virtue of our women, but as has been pointed out where these lynchings have occurred—and 95 percent of them have been confined to black men, women, and children of the South—there is no necessity for lynching. The courts are constituted of white men. The judge and the prosecutor are white and the juries are white as well as the witnesses. What show has a black man to escape the death penalty if his guilt is established? There is no excuse for overturning the laws and the constitutions of the States and of the United States and bring about anarchy in any community.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Not at present. My time is limited.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I just wanted to endorse what the gentleman said.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I thank the gentleman, and I will yield again if that is the kind of interruption the gentleman wants to make. It is true that the record shows that less than one-sixth of the black people that have been mobbed and murdered were accused of an offense of any kind against women. Five-sixths were for other offenses and I regret to say that many of them were of a trivial nature, and so far as the women were concerned, 100 of them were black women and black children. So that lynching is not altogether to protect the sanctity of the home or the virtue of our women. We can protect them in the courts under the law. Of course, in my opinion, whether the victim be black or white if the crime is rape, the criminal should be hanged, and hanged publicly as we do in Kentucky. The regrettable thing about it is that in hundreds of cases of mob violence, where lives have been taken, the record shows that the victims were innocent and should not have received any punishment.

My idea about this bill is that we are not undertaking to tell the States or the officials of the States what they shall do in case of mob violence or that they shall prosecute people for murder. This bill creates a new law. It creates a punishment for whom? For agents of the State or county who do what? Who refuse or neglect to protect the citizens of the State. Suppose I am an agent for a corporation and I fail or refuse or neglect to do my duty to my fellow workmen. In such a case the injured man may go into court and get damages. My dear friend Judge SUMNERS spoke of about trying the father and the mother and the relatives. This bill does not provide for that at all. It can apply only to an official who has the power and duty to protect the citizen who is lynched. Then that official or employee can be reached only when it appears that he has refused or neglected to perform that duty to the citizen.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has again expired.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes more to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. You cannot get the defendant into the Federal court under this bill unless it appears that he is an official of the State, or an agent of the State or county, and that he refused or neglected to protect the citizen, or after the commission of the crime he refused or neglected to apprehend the guilty parties.

It seems to me that this language is very plain in the Constitution:

Nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

The State cannot act in and of itself. It must have agents, officers, or representatives. So this bill proposes to do what? If a State or county denies to any of its citizens the equal protection of the law by refusal or neglect of their officers, the officer, agent, or representative of the State who had the power and authority to protect the citizen and prevent his being lynched, but refused or neglected to do so, can be punished.

Yes; they say there were only 3 lynchings last year. That is 3 too many who were denied the equal protection of the laws in this great democracy of ours. What has brought that about? Several things. My friends, I think one of the things that has brought it about has been the persistent fight made in the Congress and all over this country for the last 20 years or more to pass a law to stop this mob murder in the United States. Millions of citizens, 70 percent of the Nation and 65 percent of the South, have urged it. When the first bill was under consideration the lynchings dropped down to twenty-odd in a year. It had been up to 100, or more, but just after that bill had been defeated by a filibuster in the Senate the very next year lynchings greatly increased. I think this agitation in Congress has been a deterrent, and together with that we have education and a growing sentiment against it. Both the Democratic Party and the Republican Party have gone on record time and again, and written into their platforms pledges to pass this legislation. Does my distinguished friend from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] think that the Democratic Party wrote into its platform something that was unconstitutional, something that was insincere and that they did not propose to do for the people of this country? I know the Republican Party believed it was constitutional. The Republican Party is sincere, and has been doing its best since 1920 to write this very legislation into law.

It is not a matter of votes for me. I have practically no colored people in my district. In one county in my district there has not lived a colored person for 40 years. It is not a question of politics, I want to say to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary. We can entertain honest convictions on legislation as well as the gentlemen who oppose this legislation. I am honestly in favor of it and have been through the years.

I could give some of my own experiences in which lynchings occurred in my own State and in which innocent people were mistreated, one in particular that I recall, who was put to death when it turned out later that he was not guilty. In my own home county several years ago, and before I became a Member of Congress, a woman was attacked. She was unconscious. The folks picked up a colored man, a stranger passing through the county. He was rushed to the county jail. It was not long until a mob gathered, but the circuit judge of that district and other officers armed themselves and they stood guard over that jail all night, determined that that man, though a stranger, should have a trial according to law, be confronted with the witnesses against him, and have the benefit of counsel and be tried by a jury, and after deliberation, to make a verdict according to the law and the evidence. The next day the woman became conscious. Under her fingernails was found some red hair. When she became conscious she told that the man who had assaulted her was a man with red hair. That led to his detection. So, but for the courage of a lot of officials, feeling their responsibility under their oaths to protect a prisoner within their charge, there would have been chalked up another innocent person executed by mob murder.

Oh, yes, this bill merely says—

Whenever a lynching occurs, any officer or employee of a State or any governmental subdivision thereof who is charged with the duty or possesses the authority to protect such person or persons from lynching, and neglects or refuses to make all diligent efforts to protect such person or persons from lynching, or who has the custody of the person or persons lynched—

And so on. So this is not a hardship upon an official. It just requires him to perform his plain sworn duty to the citizen who is charged with a crime. That is all it means.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. PITTENGER. Does this bill differ materially from the bills considered in other sessions of Congress?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. No. I think it is drawn more carefully to protect the officers and agents of the States and the counties and States. I think the bill has been drawn very carefully.

I shall not take any more of your time, believing that the measure is constitutional and that we ought to wipe out forever this dark blot on our country, because America is the worst sinner of any country in the world for murdering people by mob violence. There is no excuse for it. This law will stop it. I think it is constitutional, and I just as earnestly support it as my distinguished friend from Texas opposes it.

I thank you. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky yields back 1 minute.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Washington, Judge LEAVY.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Chairman, I voted against the antilynching bill when it came before this body in the Seventy-fifth Congress. The legislation that we were then considering was almost identical with that which we have before us today.

I did not cast my vote against the antilynching bill to indicate that I approve or condone lynchings. I hate and despise lawlessness in any form, at all times; and from my own viewpoint I cannot feel that in any part of this great Nation of ours lynching is essential to maintain peace, security, and good order among our people.

I approached this matter when it was before us in the Seventy-fifth Congress, and likewise approach this legislation now being considered, purely on the ground of its validity, in reference to being constitutional or not.

It is my firm conviction, even though I despise lynching and hope to see it completely disappear, as the facts disclosed in this debate show it is disappearing, that the proposed legislation, like the bill that preceded it in the Seventy-fifth Congress, is unconstitutional. Being of that conviction, I could not, without doing violence to my oath and my conscience, support the proposed legislation, and I shall, therefore, vote against it.

FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT DOES NOT APPLY

The proponents of this legislation seek to assert its constitutionality by virtue of the fourteenth amendment, particularly that part of the amendment which provides that no State may "deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." It is my contention that this provision can have no application until some State by affirmative act has done something that could be construed to be a denial of such protection. The occurrence of a lynching or mob violence is no more a denial of equal protection than is the occurrence of any other criminal act within the State.

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT ONE OF DERIVED POWERS

It is conceded by all of us that the Federal Government is possessed only of such rights and powers as are conferred upon it by the Constitution. Every other power and attribute of sovereignty is "reserved to the States respectively, or to the people," by provisions of the tenth amendment. Now, this means that there is no general police power in the Federal Government except such as is specifically granted to it by the Federal Constitution, and this in turn means that all police power is lodged in the respective States, except insofar as they may have surrendered attributes of sovereignty by the provisions of the Federal Constitution.

To permit the Federal Government to make a dereliction of official duty by the county sheriff or any other police official of a State, a criminal offense, would constitute an immediate surrender of State police power to the Federal Government, and that without constitutional authorization. If it can be held that a given course of conduct or a failure to follow a certain course of conduct as this bill sets up constitutes a felony when such conduct in no way involves the crossing of State lines nor directly or indirectly comes under interstate activities would be to grant that the Federal Government has the right to define, prosecute, and punish every kind and character of public offense that is now recognized to be exclusively within the rights of the respective States.

PROPOSED LEGISLATION RESTS UPON EXERCISE OF POLICE POWER

The proposed legislation, insofar as the crime it seeks to define and create is concerned, can rest only on a grant of power given to the Federal Government by the States. There is no such grant of power, either express or implied, to be found anywhere within the Constitution. The Federal Government, being a Government of limited police power, of course, cannot claim the right to enact this legislation, based upon the broad principle of inherent police power in a sovereign. If the features of this bill as found in section 3, defining what constitutes a felony, were to be held as a valid exercise of constitutional right, then each of the 48 States could be deprived of all jurisdiction of all criminal offenses which are now within the exclusive jurisdiction of the State courts.

CIVIL RIGHTS UNDER THIS PROPOSED LEGISLATION

I desire to devote the major part of the time at my disposal to discuss what to me seems the most clear-cut, unconstitutional provision of this act. That is the portion of the bill which creates civil rights and provides for the remedies when such rights are violated. Now, let us examine the language of the bill insofar as it touches this subject:

SEC. 5. (1) Every governmental subdivision of a State to which the State shall have delegated functions of police shall be civilly liable for any lynching which occurs within its territorial jurisdiction. * * * In every such case the culpable governmental subdivision shall be liable to each person injured or to his or her next of kin if such injury results in death for a sum not less than $2,000 nor more than $10,000. * * * (2) Liability arising under this section may be enforced and the compensation herein provided for may be recovered in a civil action in the United States district court for the judicial district of which the defendant governmental subdivision is a part.

THE ELEVENTH AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION

Now, let us read again the eleventh amendment to the Constitution, which provides "the judicial power of the United States shall not be construed to extend to any suit in law or equity commenced or prosecuted against one of the United States by citizens of another State or by citizens or subjects of any foreign state."

HISTORY OF THE ELEVENTH AMENDMENT

It will be remembered that the eleventh amendment was adopted a few years after we became a nation and for the sole purpose of expressly prohibiting citizens of a State suing another State. The amendment took from the Federal courts all jurisdiction, past, present, and future, of all controversies between States and individuals (Hollingsworth v. Virginia, 3 Dall. 378; Rhode Island v. Massachusetts, 12 Pet. 657).

COUNTIES HAVE SAME IMMUNITY AS A STATE

If a sovereign State cannot be sued without its consent, then neither can a governmental subdivision of such sovereign State be sued.

In order to sustain the validity of the bill it must be shown that the governmental subdivision against which the penalty under section 5 is directed possess none of the attributes of sovereignty and are, therefore, amenable to suit without the consent of the State governments.

That a sovereign is not subject to suit without its consent is a principle that has come down since the time of Rome (Willoughby, Constitution, p. 1382). The exemption of a State from suit by an individual as one of the attributes of sovereignty is enjoyed by every State in the Union (Hamilton, The Federalist, No. 81).

NONSUABILITY OF POLITICAL SUBDIVISIONS

Just as the power of a county to sue is controlled by the State legislature, so also the right to sue the county is limited to those cases wherein the legislature has ordained that the county shall be liable. This limitation is founded upon the theory that, as there is no remedy against the State unless by its own consent, there may be none against the county which forms an integral part of a State (R. C. L., vol. 7, p. 966; Heusaker v. Borden, 5 Cal. 288; Jackson County v. Kaul, 77 Kans. 717; Fry v. Albemarle County, 86 Va. 195). This view is indicated by the following cases:

Wolf v. Upson County (44 F. (2d) 926):

In Georgia, county may not be sued for breach of statutory duty unless statute authorizes suit.

First Nat. Bank v. Jackson County (227 Ala. 448):

County is mere political subdivision of State, and no right to suit against it exists except by statute (Code, 1923, sec. 181).

Clay County v. Curtright (251 Ill. App. 371):

County cannot sue and is immune from suit except as provided by statute.

Decatur County v. Townsend (46 Ga. App. 103):

Suit against county cannot be maintained unless expressly authorized by statute or constitutional provisions.

Webster County v. Lutz (234 Ky. 618):

County, being arm of State government, cannot be sued for its torts without its consent.

Good Road Machinery Co. v. Broadwater County (94 Mont. 68):

County may be sued only by express statutory authority, which must be strictly complied with (Revised Codes, 1921, sec. 9095).

McKay v. Washoe General Hospital (33 P. (2d) 755):

Generally, county cannot be sued without legislative consent.

W. K. Terry and Co. v. Hyde County (33 Ohio App. 118):

Authority for action by or against county must be found in statutory enactments.

Statute authorizing county to sue and be sued held merely to permit action to be brought against county within its home State.

Green Const. Co. v. Oklahoma County (174 Okla. 290):

County may sue or be sued only by virtue of constitutional or statutory authority.

Chewning v. Clarendon County (168 S. C. 351):

No tort action lies against county unless expressly permitted by statute.

County Board of Education for Houston County v. Hunt (29 Ga. App. 665):

A county is not liable to suit unless there is a law which expressly or by necessary implication so declares.

Breathitt County v. Hagins (183 Ky. 294):

Being portion of State for governmental purposes, county cannot be sued, unless statute permits it, or right can be implied from express power given, or suit is on contract which county could make.

City of Grenada v. Grenada County (115 Miss. 831):

Counties are immune from liability to the same extent as the State, and suit cannot be maintained for a liability unless authorized by some statute expressly or by necessary implication.

O'Brien v. Rockingham County (80 N. H. 522):

Counties, being mere geographical divisions of the State for the convenient exercise of sovereign power, are not suable for default in the exercise thereof, in absence of a statute permitting.

Nelson County v. Loving (126 Va. 233):

A county, as a political subdivision of the State, cannot be sued for personal injuries without consent of the State.
A county cannot be sued in tort.

Hillsborough County v. Kensett (227 Ala. 448):

County may not be sued in action ex delicto for damages resulting from construction of highway.

The fact that a county has certain rights recognized in law as its own does not sever it as a body from the State, but only distinguishes it in the State, and as a part of it, and allows local officers to enforce, in the name of the county, certain rights and duties which otherwise would have to be enforced in the name of the State—the institution and officering of local divisions being merely a means of government, as these are but parts of the machinery that constitutes the public system (7 R. C. L. 925; Comm. v. Brice, 22 Pa. St. 211).

NONLIABILITY OF GOVERNMENTAL SUBDIVISIONS FOR NONFEASANCE AND MISFEASANCE IN RELATION TO THEIR DUTIES

It is a general and well-established rule that counties are not liable at common law for injuries resulting from negligence of their officers or agents (7 R. C. L. 957). It was held in Lehigh County v. Hoffman (116 Pa. St. 119) that the county was not liable for injuries resulting from failure of county commissioners to exercise discretionary power to make certain improvements at the expense of the county. The States are practically uniform in this holding (7 R. C. L. 957).

DOUBTFUL VALIDITY OF PROSECUTING CASES IN THE NAME OF THE UNITED STATES

It is apparent, then, that in a vast majority of the States a suit by an individual against a political subdivision of the State will not be entertained in the State court. Nor would the case, if prosecuted by the individual, be entertained in a Federal court, for in the case of Duhne v. New Jersey (134 U. S. 1) the Supreme Court refused to take jurisdiction under article III, clause 2, section 2, of the Constitution over a suit by a citizen of a State against his own State.

UNITED STATES A PARTY PLAINTIFF

It may be argued that this bill provides that the United States should be the party plaintiff in any civil suit against a subdivision of the State. In the Ayers case the court said:

It must be regarded as a settled doctrine of this Court, established by its recent decisions, that the question whether a suit is within the prohibition of the eleventh amendment is not always determined by reference to the nominal parties on the record.

And then this same decision goes on to hold that the question is determined by a consideration of the nature of the case as presented by the whole record. In the light of this statement of the law, certainly the provisions in the proposed legislation wherein it is provided that the suit shall be brought "in the name of the United States for the use of the real party in interest" would clearly fall within the inhibitions of the eleventh amendment and be unconstitutional.

In the case of New Hampshire v. Louisiana (108 U. S. 76) it was held that the nonsuability of a political subdivision of a State cannot be circumvented by prosecuting the case in the name of the United States. In the case cited above the Supreme Court refused to countenance the attempt of citizens to evade the operation of the eleventh amendment by transferring their pecuniary claims to another State and having that State bring suit in their behalf. It would seem that the principle of this case would apply to an attempted evasion of constitutional prohibition by legislative enactment as well as to such an attempt by an individual.

PURPOSE OF THE ELEVENTH AMENDMENT

The very object and purpose of the eleventh amendment were to prevent the indignity of subjecting a State to coercive process of judicial tribunals at the instance of private parties (Ex parte Ayers, (123 U. S. 443).)

I cite but a few of the hundreds of similar authorities which establish beyond a doubt that the penalty provisions in the proposed legislation could not possibly be sustained when attacked upon constitutional grounds; and if they are stricken from this legislation, then it becomes an empty, useless, and meaningless thing.

MOB VIOLENCE CAN NEVER BE CONDONED

Mr. Chairman, I desire to reiterate that I would not be understood by anything that I have said nor by my vote that I shall cast against this legislation as indicating in the slightest degree that I support mob violence. On the contrary, I want it definitely understood that I am, and have always been, willing to do everything consistent with good Americanism to bring to an end that type of terrorizing lawlessness. However, we cannot hope to end lawlessness in this country, irrespective of how vicious it may be, by enacting legislation that would virtually destroy our dual form of government itself. Our hope in eliminating the evils that flow from mob violence is through the development of a wholesome public opinion, but those evils can never be wiped out by legislation that destroys the existence of 48 sovereign States; and thus in turn destroys the sovereign Nation itself. [Applause.]

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. THOMAS F. FORD].

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Chairman, listening to the debate today, I am constrained again to quote our old friend Shakespeare:

In law, what plea so tainted and corrupt
But being season'd with a gracious voice,
Obscures the show of evil?

Mr. Chairman, the broad general principle upon which this bill—H. R. 801—rests is the protection of the law for all our people under all circumstances. We all know that the fundamental right of trial by jury when accused of crime has been violated by mobs taking direct action in violation of every principle of law, of right, and of justice. To prevent such violation, to safeguard and strengthen the precious right of trial by jury, to wipe from our records the terrible crime of mob law, this bill has been introduced. All this bill attempts to accomplish is to assure to persons within the jurisdiction of every State the equal protection of the laws and to punish the crime of lynching.

This free country of ours, where our liberties are supposedly so fully guaranteed under the laws, is the only country in the world which tolerates lynching. Since 1882 there have been in excess of 5,000 lynchings in the United States. About one-quarter of the victims of mob rule have been white; three-quarters have been Negroes. About 1 out of every 15 of the victims has been proved innocent after the blood lust of the mob has been satiated for the time being.

In less than 1 percent of the lynchings have the perpetrators been brought to justice. In most cases the mob leaders were known to the authorities, and in most cases the authorities have failed to prosecute or have done so with no genuine effort to convict the guilty.

This is why enlightened Americans who believe in law and order and who are revolted at the thought of mob violence in a free country are now supporting the antilynching bill awaiting the action of this House.

I first introduced the companion to the original Wagner-Costigan bill in the Seventy-third Congress; I introduced it again in the Seventy-fourth Congress; and again, with changes, in January of last year. I hope that this will be the last time because I hope that Congress will pass H. R. 801 at this session.

This House is made up of Representatives duly elected by the people. I know it is the intention of Members to honestly represent the will of the people, and right now we have the best of evidence that the people of this Nation approve such a bill. In a poll recently taken 7 out of 10, or 70 percent, of our citizens were in favor of a Federal antilynching bill.

We who are sponsoring this bill—and this applies to many Members of the House—feel that its passage will infuse officers of the law with a new respect for the law and will cause them to make every honest and energetic effort to save prisoners from mobs.

To the argument that lynchings are decreasing and that drastic action is no longer necessary, I answer, "Pass this bill and end lynchings. Why permit this frightful blot to remain on the otherwise honorable escutcheon of our Nation?"

Let us have the courage to act, knowing that in doing so we serve justice and humanity.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER].

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, the antilynching bill presents a challenge to the Congress of the United States which must not be ignored. Brutality, lawlessness, and vicious passion can have no place within the framework of a good society. The kind of mob rule which supplants the processes of law and order when men resort to lynching is never justified. It merits the complete condemnation of all thinking people.

No one knows better than the Members of this Congress that legislation is not the cure for hysteria. Yet it may operate as a strong deterrent. It may serve to open men's minds to a reexamination of the evil it is designed to treat. It may blaze the trail for others to follow.

I have no patience with those who argue that the legislation proposed will be ineffective. It may be that only very few situations will rise to which this Federal measure will be applicable. I sincerely hope that none will rise. Yet the passage of this act by Congress will furnish a strong encouragement to the legislatures of our States to adopt similar measures for themselves. It will place this body on record as it should be placed on record. Here we are, proudly asserting that we compose the greatest group of independent lawmakers in the world. If it is not our solemn duty to denounce violence and a reckless disregard for law, then it is no one's duty.

In a world which is overrun with disorder, disregard for law and an absolute denial of the principles of humanity, we have an opportunity to reestablish the principle that all men are brothers; that all of us, no matter what we may be accused of doing, are entitled to the due process of law which our Constitution assures us. In the name of human decency and in the common cause of human equality, this measure should be written into the statutes of our Nation. Let the Seventy-sixth Congress earn the distinction of enacting this law, a law already two generations overdue. Let us face our constituents proud of our part in this battle for human rights. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, may I add a word or two in reply to an article that appeared in this morning's Washington Post, in which it was stated that the Congress was using this measure as a political football; in fact, that many of us who were in favor of this legislation were advocating its passage for political purposes. In the State of Ohio the Republican platform has as one of its planks an antilynching bill. So as a party official, as well as a Member of this body, I feel that our platforms are more than fishhooks to catch suckers. I am speaking as a Republican Member of this House in support of a measure that we as a party made a part of our platform.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

WHY IS FEDERAL PROTECTION, DUE PROCESS OF LAW, AND EQUAL PROTECTION OF THE LAWS DENIED TO LAW-ABIDING CITIZENS?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, the bill under consideration is a fraud upon its face. Its purpose, according to its title, is "to assure to persons within the jurisdiction of every State due process of law and equal protection of the laws, and to prevent the crime of lynching"—all three worthy objectives.

Unfortunately, the bill, like the National Labor Relations Act, is not so drafted as to effectuate the declared purpose, except to a very limited degree under the most favorable of circumstances.

During the past year there were but three lynchings in the United States, two of colored men, one of a white man—two in Florida, one in Mississippi.

Due process of law and equal protection of the laws was denied in thousands of instances to hundreds of thousands of American citizens. The so-called Senate Civil Liberties Committee, so it is said, has spread upon the record many examples of the denial of civil liberties, of an equal protection of the laws, to employees engaged in occupations affecting interstate commerce, a matter which justifies Federal intervention.

During the past 2 years thousands upon thousands of American citizens have been deprived of the free and untrammelled exercise of that most essential of all rights guaranteed by State and Federal Constitutions, the right to earn a livelihood.

For more than 2 years organizations which listen to the voice of a personal friend of the President, of a man who has been instrumental in the contribution of more than a million dollars to the New Deal campaign fund, have been responsible for the beating, the maiming, and the death of American citizens.

Organized violence, carried on by mobs crossing State lines, has actually suspended and held in defiance the civil authorities of the State; has prevented civil officers from enforcing State law, orders of the courts.

There is no question but that the foregoing statements are true. If any Member of this House challenges these statements, let him, during the course of this debate or at some subsequent time during the week, cite facts to the contrary for the information of the House.

May I ask this question: Is this bill introduced, was it drafted, for the purpose of bringing to the citizens of the State due process of law and equal protection of the laws? Or was it introduced for the purpose of catching the so-called Negro vote?

In view of the political significance of this measure, of the overwhelming support given it by Democrats who are trying to outdo Republicans in the effort to capture the vote of the colored man; in view of the enthusiasm and the vigor with which the so-called Senate Civil Liberties Committee investigates and condemns what some of its members consider denial of civil liberties by employers to employees, let me call the attention of that committee, as well as of the House, to just two recent instances where men were denied due process of law, the equal protection of the laws.

As time goes on during this session your attention will be called to other instances where "goon" squads, wrecking crews, and sluggers of labor organizations, or, perhaps more accurately speaking, of labor racketeers, deny civil liberties to those who want to work.

The source of this information will be the public press, which customarily is accurate and circumstantial in its news items.

Today, for the information of La Follette's so-called Civil Liberties Committee, let me refer to the case of Louis Mikolajczyk, 51 years of age, married, the father of six children, of 3036 Cullerton Street, in the city of Chicago, who on Saturday afternoon, in John's meat market at 3708 West Twenty-sixth Street, was beaten by two labor "goons" who objected because he, a union man, belonging to a meat-cutters' union, and who had taken a withdrawal card because he was out of work and had been exempted by his union from the payment of dues, was, while on W. P. A., doing clean-up work in John's market. Mikolajczyk did not receive wages, but in return for his work was given meat.

Another case from Chicago, which should prove of interest to the committee, is that of Marinus Hvid, a garage owner, who on the morning of December 28, 1939, was beaten with bats in the hands of labor "goons" so severely that he died on Saturday, December 30. According to the press, Hvid's murder was the thirty-second labor murder in Chicago, in which there has been a conviction in but one case.

If the Senate committee has ever investigated and condemned a case where a labor union denied civil liberties to, beat up, or murdered an employee, I shall be glad to have the case and any others like it pointed out by that committee. Perhaps, inadvertently, the committee has investigated such cases. A list of such cases, if there are any, would be helpful.

It is doubtful if the biased and partisan activities of the National Labor Relations Board are any more pronounced, unfair, and one-sided than are the investigations conducted by the Senate Civil Liberties Committee, whose activities are paid for with taxpayers' money.

While we are passing an antilynching bill, and the press states there were but three lynchings in 1939, if the Federal Government is to be charged with the enforcement of the law relating to local criminal acts, why not add to the antilynching bill, instead of a proviso exempting, a provision protecting those who are denied their civil liberties; the families of those who are murdered by labor racketeers and men hired by labor organizations or by labor organizers to stifle opposition by intimidating or doing away with those who oppose the organizing plans of the dues collectors and tribute leviars?

We of the North who, in search of the political support of the colored man, attempt to legislate for the States of the South would do well to read the opinion of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit, handed down on the 29th day of November 1939, a little more than a month ago. That case arose out of incidents occurring in the great city of Chicago—the city from whence comes our colleague, the respected Mr. MITCHELL; a city which has on the floor of this House 10 Representatives.

The gentleman from Chicago [Mr. MITCHELL] has been active, as he has a right to be, in behalf of the passage of this bill. Let me read to him, to the Members of the House, this statement from the court's opinion in Lake Valley Farm Products, Inc., against Milk Wagon Drivers' Union. The court said:

The growth of the cut-rate milk business in Chicago has been accompanied by violence to the distributing stores. They have had their windows broken; they have been bombed, set afire; they have been submitted to stench bombs and to other acts of violence. Cut-rate dairy plants have been bombed, have had machinery smashed, and their delivery trucks have been seized and destroyed, and they have been submitted to other acts of violence.

Fifteen to twenty stores distributing the products of plaintiff dairy were lost in the month preceding the filing of the bill of complaint; 25 to 30 stores were similarly lost since the commencement of the action; more than 100 of such stores have been picketed, and there is no way to ascertain the number of consumer patrons lost by the acts of the defendant.

Although the Court found in that case that "No labor dispute exists between plaintiff dairy and its workers," under the holding of the Supreme Court in a case arising here in Washington—New Negro Alliance v. Grocery Co. (303 U. S. 552)—The Supreme Court may overrule the Inland decision and hold that there was a labor dispute.

The damage was not confined to great chain stores, to wealthy distributors. As the master in chancery said, where the efforts of the pickets—

Were unsuccessful, said pickets were withdrawn and within a few days thereafter, usually during the night, the store of the store-keeper (some of whom were poor women struggling to make a living) was either bombed or bricks were thrown through the plate glass windows of such stores or other acts of violence were committed.

Fair play? Equal protection of the laws? By the proviso in section 2, this bill expressly exempts such incidents arising during the course of a labor dispute.

It was not so long ago—in fact, it was in 1922—that 25 men were either hung, stabbed, shot to death, or dragged behind automobiles until they were dead, by a labor organization which acted upon receipt of a telegram from John L. Lewis. Not a single individual was convicted by the State of Illinois for these wholesale murders.

It was in May of 1937 that 10 men met death in the Memorial Day strike at Chicago. According to the so-called La Follette committee, their deaths were due to the acts of the Chicago police. According to the court records and unbiased testimony, those men were killed because they followed the advice of labor organizers engaged in unlawful enterprises. Again no one was convicted because these men were killed.

Here in Congress assembled we go through the farce of enacting a bill which, by its very provisions, makes impossible the objectives announced in its title.

Let me repeat: The title informs us the bill is to be passed "to assure to persons within the jurisdiction of every State due process of law and equal protection of the laws."

Then, in the very first unnumbered section, it extends that protection only to those persons "charged with or suspected or convicted of any offense."

Most people know that the greatest denial of due process of law that has ever occurred came in connection with the sit-down strikes, when property worth millions of dollars was seized, much of it damaged, some of it destroyed, and this all without legal redress.

Most of us know that the greatest denial of equal protection of the laws, both in the number of citizens involved and the period of time over which such denial extended, occurred in the sit-down and the slow-down strikes, which began on the last day of December 1936, and have continued down to the present moment.

These denials of an equal protection of the laws, of due process of law, occurred during the course of labor disputes; and yet this act, which purports to give to the citizen due process of law and equal protection of the laws, by the language beginning in line 13 on page 2, in the second section, expressly exempts violence occurring during the course of labor disputes.

This bill does not even pretend to prevent a lynching of a white or a black man under some circumstances. If a man, white or black, be lynched, be hanged by the neck until he is dead, this law does not provide punishment for those who failed to protect him or remedy for his dependents if a labor dispute was pending to which he was a party.

So if someone in the South or someone in the North wants to lynch a white man or a colored man, all he needs to do to escape punishment under this act is to first create a labor dispute.

The bill defines lynching and then provides that lynching shall not be deemed to include "any incident in connection with any labor dispute."

Briefly, it means that if during a labor dispute—and according to recent decisions any dispute between an employer and his employees or between an employer and one who wants to be employed or who desires that some friend of his be employed is a labor dispute (New Negro Alliance v. Grocery Co., 303 U. S. 552)—a clerk in a store, the proprietor of the business, a factory worker, is brutally beaten, wantonly murdered, this act does not give to him, if he survives, nor to his dependents, if he be killed, any remedy whatsoever.

The passage of this act exempting incidents occurring in connection with labor disputes and the failure to pass similar legislation inflicting a penalty upon violence occurring during labor disputes can logically be construed as the approval by this Congress of coercion, intimidation, violence, rioting, and lynching, as defined in the act, if it occurs during the course of a labor dispute.

Nor will striking out the last five lines of paragraph 2 on page 2 make the due process and the equal protection of the law provisions of the Federal Constitution applicable to all citizens alike.

Permit me at this point to call the attention of the Committee to some absurdities in this bill and point out what a farce the bill is, and just how it purports to protect men who are suspected of, charged with, or who have been convicted of crime, but leaves law-abiding citizens at the mercy of mobs. If the bill be read, you will notice that it limits the protection given by the bill, if any is given, to persons who are suspected of, accused of, or have been convicted of a crime. There is no mistake about that. Get the bill and read it. If I am not correct, let some gentleman before the debate is over correct me. It does not purport to protect any person who is not suspected of, who has not been accused of, or who has not been convicted of a crime. It leaves the other 129,999,999 citizens of the United States who have never fallen into that category absolutely without protection, and there is no question about that. [Applause.]

Let some supporter of the bill point to the words in the bill which protect honest citizens who have not been suspected of, accused of, or convicted of a crime.

After introducing a bill here which brought down on us the condemnation of one group of voters and after leaving in the bill an exemption for all those who might commit murder during the course of labor disputes, it has been stated that the exemption will be taken out. I had an amendment prepared to that effect. Is it a good bill? Why was the exemption put in there in the beginning? Have you heard from labor organizations? You will hear from them before tomorrow when they find they are covered by the terms of this bill.

The bill as it stands before the House today permits or, if it does not permit, it at least exempts from punishment all of those who bring about violence and death in connection with labor disputes.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. Under this bill as it now stands you could lynch every Negro or white man in a State and you would not be punished under the bill unless they were suspected of or charged with a crime. It does not protect the innocent or attempt to do so.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Under this bill you could lynch a white man, a colored man, a Chinaman, or anyone else, and unless that man has been suspected of, convicted of, or charged with a criminal offense the bill does not apply. What an absurdity it is. Here is a white man or Negro who commits the crime of rape. He is lynched. Under this bill his dependents can collect through the district court of the United States from $2,000 to $10,000.

On the other hand, a man who has never been convicted of an offense, who has never been charged with an offense, who has never been suspected of an offense, may be beaten to death, as in the Chicago case, but this bill does not give his widow or his children a right to go into a court and collect damages. On the other hand, it gives to the widow and children of a man who has been convicted of rape, who is taken out of jail, and who is lynched, the privilege of going into court and collecting damages, not less than $2,000 nor more than $10,000.

What is the use of deceiving ourselves? The gentleman from Chicago [Mr. MITCHELL] has said that he wants fairness, he wants justice. We agree. Let us have due process of law and equal protection under the law. Let us have it for all, not for just a class. Why not put into this bill a provision that the honest citizen, the man who wants to work for a livelihood—a right which is necessary if the individual is to exist—shall be protected, and that if the authorities fail to protect him, then his widow or his dependents shall have a right to civil damages?

I repeat that this bill is a fraud. It is a farce on the face of it.

Mr. KITCHENS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. KITCHENS. Is not this bill, with its discrimination against innocent people and the heirs of innocent people who have been murdered or killed, itself a violation of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I have been a lawyer for 40 years, but I do not pretend to know much law. I leave the answer to that question to more legalistic minds. I go more on common sense and a sense of justice than I do on the technicalities that are in the books because, since Brother Frankfurter went on the Supreme Court Bench and I read that statement of his that the Constitution was what the Court said it was, I have considered what little legal learning I had to be of less importance.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. In the opinion of the gentleman, is this the old Force bill brought up to date?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I will permit the gentleman to answer his own question.

If we are to have a Federal law which will protect the citizens of the States in the rights guaranteed to them by State and Federal Constitutions, punishing those who fail to enforce the laws of the State, punishing municipalities which are responsible for the failure of officers to give protection, then let the law protect all citizens. Let it not be limited to persons who are charged with, suspected of, or have been convicted of, an offense.

Let protection be extended to the honest, decent, law-abiding, God-fearing, patriotic American citizen who has never been suspected of, charged with, or convicted of, an offense.

Let us not deny protection to the law-abiding—to the guiltless.

Under this act, if it becomes a law, the dependents of the murderer who is lynched can collect from two to ten thousand dollars from the municipality which had jurisdiction of the place where he died, while the dependents of the law-abiding citizen who was never suspected of, charged with, or convicted of, an offense, walking down to his place of employment to earn his daily bread, clubbed to death by the wrecking crew of a labor organization during the progress of a labor dispute, or by gangsters, are without remedy. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, our system of government is founded upon, and dedicated to, the proposition that all men are created free and equal and that each of us is entitled to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness so long as we do not invade the rights of others. To guarantee and to safeguard these inalienable rights of American citizenship we provide that no individual shall lose his life, liberty, or property except under due process of law and after a fair trial by jury.

Yet here in our America, in the Nation we boast as the most democratic and highly civilized on the face of the earth, we have seen mob rule and lynch law prevail many times.

True, the victims, in most instances, have been the lowly, the poor, and the uneducated, of the Negro race—the citizens least able to safeguard or maintain their rights.

We hear much of the struggle throughout the world to maintain democracy. From the lips of some of those who oppose this measure comes at other times the loudest protestations of belief in democracy. Let me say to you, gentlemen, here and now, that if democracy is to continue to live throughout the world and here in our beloved America, those of us who have the ability and the power to do so must see to it that the full rights of the weak and the defenseless are safeguarded and protected against the violence and the intolerance of the strong and the mighty.

Our Central Government has both the duty and the responsibility of seeing justice prevail in every corner of this broad land. It is not an invasion of State rights for the Government of the United States to see to it that the right of trial by jury is maintained and that the very intent and purpose of our democracy is not destroyed by those who place themselves without the law by taking the law within their own hands.

Let us here today take another advanced step toward making democracy work by further extending its benefits and its safeguards through the passage of this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Celler] such time as he may desire.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, everybody agrees that lynching is vile, horrible, and unspeakable. I have yet to find anyone who approves of or condones this heinous offense. The only argument, therefore, concerning the matter of lynching is the remedy used. It should and ought to be a remedy limited to the States. Unfortunately, however, the record clearly indicates that the States do not do their full duty in this regard. Consequently the Federal Government must and should intervene.

HISTORY OF LYNCHING

The record shows that lynching is neither sectional nor racial. For many years more victims were white than black. For example, in the year 1882, of the 114 people lynched, 65 were white and 49 black; in 1883, of the 131 people lynched, 79 were white and 52 were black; and in 1884, of the 210 people lynched, 158 were white and 52 were black. Only 6 States have been free from lynchings, namely, the 6 New England States—Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and Connecticut.

In California, between 1882 and 1930, 42 whites and 4 blacks were lynched.

In Kansas, between 1882 and 1930, 34 whites and 18 blacks were lynched.

In Mississippi, between 1882 and 1930, 45 whites and 500 blacks were lynched.

In Louisiana, between 1882 and 1930, 60 whites and 328 blacks were lynched.

In Texas, between 1882 and 1930, 143 whites and 349 blacks were lynched.

IS LYNCHING ON THE DECREASE?

In 1936, the Tuskegee Institute reports, there were 8 lynchings. The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People reports a higher figure, namely, 13. The highest point in lynching took place in the year 1892, when 226 people were lynched. In 1932 there were 38 lynchings. In 1936 there were 8 lynchings; these were 8 too many.

Moreover, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People reports that in 1935, while there were 25 cases of lynching, there were—the association specifically points out—102 cases of narrowly averted lynchings. This is very significant.

I am firmly convinced that there is a diminution in the number of actual lynchings. But the abatement may not be permanent. There can be a shift at any time, say, from the South to the North. Like an epidemic, it can crop out at any moment.

We are told that since there is at present a decrease in lynching, antilynching legislation is not necessary. It might be well to present the analogy of having a good doctor attend a sick patient. If the patient does well, should we dismiss the doctor? In other words, since the States, as the "doctor," are doing very well, should we bring in a Federal "doctor"? You may say, however, that the analogy is not perfect; that the crime of lynching is diminishing; and that the patient, therefore, is doing well. I say, however, that it might be effective to call in a specialist, or rather to keep a specialist within call. The symptoms may change. The specialist can act in an emergency. The old "doctor"—State antilynching laws—can remain, while the new "doctor," Federal antilynching law, is in the offing.

The pending antilynching bill does not prevent the old "doctor" from still ministering; it simply summons aid—the Federal "doctor"—only when the old "doctor" falls down and does not do his duty or cannot do his duty.

A study of 84 lynchings during the 5 years between 1931 and 1935 reveals the following facts:

First. A larger proportion of the lynchings of this period occurred in the South than ever before, and a larger proportion of the victims were Negroes.

Second. Eleven percent of the mob victims were not accused of any crime; an additional 30 percent were accused only of minor offenses. Of the other 59 percent, many were not guilty of the crimes with which they were charged.

Third. Contrary to the general impression that rape is the chief cause of lynching, only 11 percent of the victims were even accused of this crime. Scarcely one-fourth were accused of rape and attempted rape combined.

Fourth. Courts rarely indict lynchers, more rarely convict, and almost never impose sentences commensurate with the crime. Indictments have been returned in but 1 lynching in 12 and convictions in scarcely 1 in 30.

Fifth. There is evidence that peace officers participated in several lynchings and connived in as many more.

Sixth. Over nine-tenths of the lynchings occurred in the open country and a little over four-fifths in counties where the per capita income and taxable wealth were below those of their respective States. Over three-fourths of the threatened lynchings were prevented also in the poorer rural counties.

Seventh. When a mob does not lynch it sometimes dominates the court, and so brings about a "legal lynching."

Eighth. Nearly 20 percent of the persons lynched and threatened by mobs were mental defectives.

CHANGING ATTITUDE IN THE SOUTH

I give you a reprint from an editorial in the Richmond Times-Dispatch of Tuesday, February 2, 1937:

The Times-Dispatch favors the enactment of the Federal antilynching bill just introduced in the House of Representatives and shortly to be introduced in the Senate. It seems no hope of ever wiping out lynching, the greatest crime against southern civilization, except through Federal action.

If every State would enact an antilynching law similar to that which Virginia passed a decade ago, lynching could be almost, if not wholly, obliterated. The Virginia law makes lynching an offense against the State as a whole, subjects all participants in lynchings to charges of murder, and authorizes the Governor to have the attorney general aid in the prosecution and to spend any sum he—the Governor—deems wise in convicting the guilty parties. There has not been a single lynching in the Old Dominion since that law was placed on the statute books.

But it has become plain that few, if any, of the Southern States will follow Virginia's legislative example. Although the Dyer antilynching bill of 1922 and the Costigan-Wagner antilynching bill of 1935 would almost certainly have passed but for the filibusters of southern Senators, most Southern States seem to have learned nothing from these episodes. Southern Senators on both occasions expressed profound resentment over the possibility that the Federal Government might be permitted to interfere in the affairs of the States, but they do not seem to have done anything to make such intervention unnecessary.

This newspaper's primary objective is to put a stop to the seemingly endless series of mob murders which have disgraced the South and America before the world. That impresses us as far more important than the preservation of something generally referred to as "State sovereignty" or "States' rights." As long as States' rights are appreciated by the States, and the administrative authorities of the States show that they recognize the duties which accompany the exercise of such rights, this newspaper believes in respecting those rights. But when the phrase "the rights of the States" degenerates into a mere shibboleth behind which the State and local authorities can ignore and flout the law of the land by permitting lynchers to go unpunished year after year, then the Times-Dispatch believes that intervention by the Federal Government is not only desirable but necessary.

It is clear, then, that lynching will not be wiped out until there is a new spirit abroad in the land, or until State and local authorities bestir themselves far more vigorously than they have done heretofore. We see no likelihood that either will occur in the measurable future.

One of the most convincing demonstrations that this is true was given in the autumn of 1934, when Claude Neal was taken from an Alabama jail and lynched in Florida. At least 15 hours' notice was given to the Nation's press and over the radio that Neal was to be lynched, and from 4,000 to 7,000 white people gathered, among them many small children. Neal was put to death with the most unspeakable and unprintable tortures. No one was even arrested.

As long as State and local officials are indifferent to these barbarities they will continue to occur. We see no alternative but to enact a Federal law with teeth in it and to let the G-men and the Federal courts go into action.

In the Washington Post there appeared sometime ago a report of a poll of the Institute of Public Opinion, which indicates that 70 percent of the people of America favor a Federal antilynching law. Sixty-five percent of the people of the South favor a Federal antilynching law. The South is entitled to great credit for the real progress it has made in developing public opinion against lynching. It should continue its great efforts by education, moral suasion, and precept, and the spreading of righteous enlightenment to stamp out utterly this dreadful crime. I have before me the picture of the lynching and hanging of Rubin Stacy, a Negro, who was lynched at Fort Lauderdale, Fla., on July 19, 1935, for "threatening and frightening a white woman." He suffered physical torture for a few short hours. In the picture one sees a number of children viewing this victim hanging by his neck. What psychological havoc is being wrought in the minds of these children. They gaze at this gruesome spectacle. One cannot tell whether it is horror or gloating on the face of the neatly dressed 7-year-old girl in the scene. Another child, about 4 years of age, is seen in the picture. One wonders whether she is old enough to comprehend the barbarism her elders have perpetrated. What kind of citizens will these children make whose elders made them familiar with this inhuman practice?

The victim, Stacy, is also manacled. That tells a story of its own. He was powerless in the hands of the law. But the State law was powerless to protect him from being lynched.

Since 1922 over one-half of the lynched victims have thus been taken from legal custody.

I have before me another picture, that of Claude Neal, a Negro, whom a mob took from the custody of a sheriff in Alabama. He was transported over State lines to Florida, and there was lynched. The lynching was advertised in the newspapers and over the radio 12 hours in advance of the horrible exhibition. Between six and seven thousand persons came to witness the hanging. The picture of the victim before me shows horrible mutilation of his chest and thighs. His fingers were cut off, I am informed, and taken as souvenirs. After this picture was taken his toes were cut from his feet. An enterprising photographer, I am further informed, made post cards of this picture and sold them in large quantities at 50 cents each.

THERE IS NO ADEQUATE PUNISHMENT BY STATES

There is a shameful failure; there is a cruel dereliction of duty on the part of States in punishing the horrible crime of lynching. In all cases since 1882, 99.2 percent of the perpetrators went unwhipped of justice. The State acts have failed; the States have failed to punish this heinous crime.

Those who have brought their minds and hearts to bear on this vital subject, including the speakers who persuasively address us today, fully realize that the hour has passed when we may longer leave this evil, which disgraces us at home and abroad, to the cold mercy of States where prejudice, in the form of real or simulated rage, may at any moment light an indiscriminate torch and demand victims, guilty or innocent.

The punishment for homicide in this country is up to 44 percent. However, when it is the crime of lynching, the punishment is only eight-tenths of 1 percent. James H. Chadbourne, assistant professor of law at the University of North Carolina, says:

Although 1,741 persons were lynched (1900-1930), there is a record of only 12 instances in which convictions have been secured. These 12 instances embrace 67 individual convictions. Statistically therefore, only eight-tenths of 1 percent of the lynchings since 1900 have been followed by convictions of any of the lynchers.

Convictions for lynching

State	Date	Charge	Pleas	Number convicted	Sentences
Alabama	1900	Murder	Guilty	3	10 years to life.
Do	1919	Complicity in murder	(Guilty (28) (Not guilty (2))	30	$100 to 15 years.
Do	1920	(?)	Not guilty	3	$100 and 3 months.
Do	1920	Murder	do	3	15 years to life.
Georgia	1922	(?)	do	3	1 to 4 years.
Do	1926	Murder	(Guilty (2) (Not guilty (7))	9	4 years to life.
Missouri	1903	(?)	(?)	?	10 years.
Oklahoma	1922	Complicity in murder	(?)	7	Life.
Virginia	1923	(?)	(?)	2	1 and 2 years.
Minnesota	1920	Rioting	(?)	1	(?)
Texas	1920	Manslaughter	Guilty	3	2 years suspend.
Illinois	1903	(?)	(?)	11	Indeterminate.

The first inclination in considering this low percentage of successful enforcement is to conclude that here is one of the worst failures, if not the worst, with which the law has been confronted. This conclusion is strengthened by comparing the relatively high percentage of 44 for the punishment of homicide.

Convictions for attempted lynching

State	Date	Number convicted	Sentences
Illinois	1925	1	$100 and 30 days.
Georgia	1924	4	3 to 4 months.
North Carolina	1921	1	4 years.
Do	1925	11	4 to 8 years.
South Carolina	1914	2	(?)
Tennessee	1920	8	$50 and costs.
Do	1921	3	(?)
Virginia	1920	2	$25 and 10 days.
Do	1921	1	$100 and 1 year.

TYPICAL CASES OF FAILURE OF PUNISHMENT

"Passing the buck" is an effective method. Following a lynching in Missouri in 1925 the coroner was reported to have said, "There will be no inquest"; the county attorney, "We feel that justice has been done; of course, the method was crude." The chief of police said that he knew members of the mob, but "it was up to the county attorney."

In two 1930 cases the grand jury investigations did not come until 6 months after the lynchings. In one of these an investigator reports that "it—the grand jury hearing—doubtless would not have been instituted then except for the persistent demands of a few leading citizens." In the other he reports:

The investigation * * * was disposed of as routine business, and no one was surprised that no indictments were drawn. The investigation amounted to nothing more than an entry on the court records that a lynching had been investigated.

The continuance sometimes comes at the grand jury stage. In Georgia in 1930 the grand jury convened within 2 weeks of the lynching. No indictments were returned, but the presentment said, "We heartily recommend and urge our next grand jury to continue zealously the investigation which we have begun." The next grand jury returned no indictments, but recommended that its successor, in turn, give serious consideration to the matter.

Related to the continuance is the mistrial. In Alabama in 1923 there were three mistrials before a conviction was secured, and this conviction was ultimately reversed after five appeals.

The change of front by the State's witnesses is not without precedent.

Reluctance to testify is exhibited in other ways, however, than a change of front. In Union, S. C., in 1930, the sheriff testified before the coroner's jury, "I almost had my hands on the 'nigger,' but never succeeded in getting hold of him." When news came to Governor Richards that the sheriff, although in the mob for some time presumably trying to gain possession of the prisoner, could not identify any member of the mob, Governor Richards declared the sheriff's conduct was reprehensible, and sent investigators from his office. No court action was taken. Again the material witnesses may be intimidated. This was true of the 1930 case at Bryan, Tex. A local attorney made the statement that there were Negroes who, he knew confidentially, had incriminating evidence which would lead to trials and probably conviction of the men who killed Roan, but that they would not give it before the courts for fear of reprisal.

Thus the break-down of cases, listed in the order of the frequency of occurrence, is as follows:

First. Refusal of persons with first-hand knowledge to testify.

Second. Trial-jury verdict actuated by local prejudice in lieu of consideration of evidence.

Third. Failure of the grand jury to make adequate investigation.

Fourth. Failure of the prosecuting officer to investigate and furnish the grand jury with evidence.

Fifth. Nolle prosequi by prosecuting officer.

Sixth. Adverse trial-court rulings on motions and evidence.

Seventh. Reversal by appellate court on nonprejudicial error.

Certainly, in view of this record, the States have woefully failed to punish. The conclusion is therefore inescapable—there must be Federal antilynching legislation.

CONSTITUTIONALITY OF ANTILYNCHING LEGISLATION

The fourteenth amendment to the Constitution provides that no State "shall deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws"; and further provides that "the Congress shall have power to enforce, by appropriate legislation the provisions of this article." It is well settled by decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States that the denial forbidden is not alone a denial by positive legislation but that "no agency of the State, or of the officers or agents by whom its powers are exerted, shall deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws."

It is thus made the duty of the Congress under the Constitution to enact such laws as may be needful to assure that no State shall deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws. Within the limits of the jurisdiction thus conferred the Congress has the right to exercise its discretion as to what laws or what means can best accomplish the desired end.

In nearly all cases of lynching the person put to death is taken by a mob from the sheriff, marshal, or other police officer of the State, whose failure to defend and protect him denies to him the equal protection of the laws.

In Ex parte Virginia (100 U. S. 339, 346), the Supreme Court in a unanimous opinion, by Mr. Justice Strong, speaking of the prohibitions of the fourteenth amendment, says:

They have reference to actions of the political body denominated a State, by whatever instruments or in whatever modes that action may be taken. A State acts by its legislative, its executive, or its judicial authorities. It can act in no other way. The constitutional provision, therefore, must mean that no agency of the State, or of the officers or agents by whom its powers are exerted, shall deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws. Whoever, by virtue of public position under a State government, deprives another of property, life, or liberty without due process of law, or denies or takes away the equal protection of the laws, violates the constitutional inhibition; and as he acts in the name and for the State, and is clothed with the State's power, his act is that of the State. This must be so, or the constitutional prohibition has no meaning. Then the State has clothed one of its agents with power to annul or to evade it.

But the constitutional amendment was ordained for a purpose. It was to secure equal right to all persons; and to insure to all persons the enjoyment of such rights, power was given to Congress to enforce its provisions by appropriate legislation. Such legislation must act upon persons, not upon the abstract thing denominated a State, but upon the persons who are the agents of the State in the denial of the rights which were intended to be secured (see also the very recent cases of Home Telephone Co. v. Los Angeles, 227 U. S. 278, 290; Buchanan v. Worley, 245 U. S. 60, 77).

A distinguished southern judge has given this definition:

By "equal protection of the laws" is meant equal security under them to everyone in his life, his liberty, his property, and in the pursuit of happiness. It not only implies the right of each to resort on the same terms with others to the courts of the country for the security of his person and property, the prevention and redress of wrongs, and the enforcement of contracts, but also his exemption from any greater burdens and charges than such as are equally imposed on all others under like circumstances.

The Supreme Court of the United States says of this provision:

When the facts shown establish an administration directed so exclusively against a particular class of persons as to warrant and require the conclusion that, whatever may have been the intent of the laws as adopted, they are applied by the public authorities charged with their administration, and thus representing the State itself, with a mind so unequal and oppressive as to amount to a practical denial by the State of that equal protection of the laws which is secured to the petitioners as to all other persons, by the broad and benign provisions of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States. Though the law itself be fair on its face and impartial in appearance, yet if it is applied and administered by public authority with an evil eye and an unequal hand, so as practically to make unjust and illegal discriminations between persons in similar circumstances material to their rights, the denial of equal justice is still within the prohibition of the Constitution.

In another case the same Court said:

An actual discrimination against a Negro on account of his race by officers entrusted with the duty of carrying out the law is as potential in creating a denial of equality of rights as a discrimination made by law.

Article I, section 8, of the Constitution gave the Congress the power—

To provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia, and for governing such part of them as may be employed in the service of the United States—

As well as—to provide for calling forth militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections, and repel invasions—

But it was not until long after the adoption of the fourteenth amendment that our courts construed "insurrections" to include mobs and riotous assemblages. Under these two provisions quoted there can be no doubt whatever as to the power of Congress to define and punish the crime of lynching.

KIDNAPING

Most, if not all, States have laws against kidnaping. But the crimes of stealing children continued unabated. Then came the Lindbergh case. A Federal law against kidnaping was set up. Kidnaping has abated. The culprits fear the G-men. They fear the Federal law. They often do not fear the State law. Should there be any difference between our treatment of kidnaping and lynching?

PAYMENT OF INDEMNITY AT THE INSTANCE OF FOREIGN NATIONS FOR THE LYNCHING OF ALIENS

I know of nothing more humiliating and disgraceful than the confession by this Government that it is without the power to make good the guarantee in our Constitution that no person should be deprived of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness without due process of law.

Yet the State Department still does make this proclamation in official communications to civilized countries like England, France, Germany, and so forth.

We have appropriated, and this Government has paid to other governments, the sum of $792,499 to compensate for the murders of aliens by American mobs. There are now in the State Department unadjustable claims to a large amount for the murder of Greeks, Japanese, Mexicans, and Italians. The afore-mentioned sum of $792,499 was paid for less than 100 lives of foreigners taken by American mobs. The following question is rather pertinent: If we paid $792,499 for less than 100 murdered foreigners, how much has the country lost by the murder of 4,761 Americans killed by mobs since 1882?

The following four cases have arisen since 1921 and have been filed with the Mexican-American Claims Commission:

(1) Jose Maria Casas and Gerardo Contreras, two Mexicans who were hanged by persons described as American Federal employees. Hanging took place near Rio Grande, Tex., December 26, 1887. Mexico claims $50,000.

(2) Antonio Gamez was lynched at Thorndale, Tex., June 9, 1911, after killing a man in self-defense. Four persons were tried for the crime and acquitted. The prosecuting attorney said each one of the four was guilty and should have been convicted under the evidence produced at the trial. Mexico claims $50,000.

(3) Antonio Rodriguez was burned alive at Rocksprings, Tex., November 3, 1911. He had murdered the wife of one L. K. Henderson. He was arrested by the sheriff and taken to jail. The same day a mob of over 100 men overpowered the sheriff, took the prisoner about one-half mile from Rocksprings, and burned him alive. Mexico claims $50,000.

(4) Santos Ortiz and Hose Gonzalez were taken out of jail at Pueblo, Colo., by a mob of masked men who entered the jail, overpowered the officials, and abducted the prisoners, who were later found hanged. Mexico claims $50,000.

The following case was taken up by the Italian Government through diplomatic channels, but our Government disallowed the claim, since it was not proved that the victims were Italian subjects:

Johannes Stathis, Theodoros Sinarkos, and Georga Gorgin were taken into custody by P. W. Brewer and Thomas Booth, and by them were locked in a jail at Cedar Key, Fla. Brewer and Booth then burned the jail and the three men locked within. Brewer and Booth were subsequently convicted of murder in the first degree—November 18, 1932.

That there has been some progress in the determination of an aroused citizenry to rid itself of this evil is to be found in the fact that, although lynching and mob violence under the common law had no technical significance, nevertheless statutes have made lynching a crime sui generis in six States—Alabama, Indiana, Kansas, Kentucky, Virginia, and North Carolina. The same is true of mob violence in four States—Illinois, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and West Virginia. Four States have provisions for accessory liability—Alabama, Indiana, Kansas, and Kentucky. Kentucky also provides penalties for attempted lynching.

So great is the national concern as regards lynching that the President has felt called upon to denounce this "vile form of collective murder" and to berate its apologists. Thus a number of years ago, following the lynching of two youths at San Jose, Calif., when the Nation was shocked and indignant over the endorsement by the then Governor of that State of mob ruthlessness, President Roosevelt unreservedly denounced lynching as "collective murder" and declared: "We do not excuse those in high or low places who condone lynch law."

Let us follow the lead of our enlightened leader in the White House. Let us urge upon Congress the vital importance of this legislation. Let us once and for all times do away with this horrible lynching blot on the pages of American history.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, this bill classifies a certain type of homicide as lynching. It provides that three or more persons shall constitute a mob within the meaning of the proposed act. Any violence by a so-called mob which results in the death or maiming of the victim or victims thereof shall constitute lynching within the meaning of the act, and it then provides that lynching shall not be deemed to include violence occurring during the course of picketing or any incident in connection with any labor dispute.

It seems to find that a certain type of murder is more reprehensible than other forms of death by inflicting violence, and, by inference, sets up the premise that Southern States are unable to prevent its occurrence.

The crime of lynching is one that every Member of this House opposes. The question is, Shall the remedy be applied by the United States Government or shall it be applied by local government?

If, under this proposed act, the United States Government says that three men can be punished for murder, then the United States Government can say that one man can be punished for murder, it can punish another for exceeding the speed limit in a car, another for petty larceny, for gambling, and for all crimes upon the State statute books.

If Congress undertakes to set up Federal supervision over State statutes applying to one particular form of crime, then Congress could pass laws in the future providing for the supervision of any State statutes, leading to complete domination of State and local laws by the Federal Government.

Every State has a law against murder—and lynching is murder—and it does not matter whether it comes from the machine gun of the gangster, the rope of the lynch mob, or the brute kidnaper—it is still murder, punishable according to the laws of the State in which it is committed.

I took the position, and stated on this floor in 1937 when we had a similar bill under consideration, that the Federal Government should not have the right to supervise the police forces of the various States, counties, and municipalities of this country. The Federal Government has contracted with the several States of this Union to leave the administration of certain local affairs to the judgment and the will of the people within those local jurisdictions.

The Union was formed for the mutual protection of the States against outside aggression. Different rights, privileges, and responsibilities were reserved to the States as sovereign entities. We surrender, under this bill, jurisdiction reserved exclusively to the States, counties, and municipalities, and provide that the acts of legally elected and appointed State officers shall be supervised by the Federal courts.

No better men are found anywhere than the average sheriff and peace officer of my State and section of the country. These men are courageous, honest, honorable, and perform their duties without partiality. This bill is a reflection upon every peace officer in the United States, and by its enactment a number of these splendid officers would refuse to serve.

This bill proposes to enforce penalties by fines as high as $5,000 and by imprisonment as long as 5 years by the Federal courts on local officers unable to prevent mob violence against persons in their custody, and requires the counties in which lynchings may occur to pay a sum as high as $10,000. How can you enforce such a judgment against a county? Why should the innocent taxpayers of the county be required to pay any of this sum? All members of the mob might be from a county other than the county where the lynching occurred, which I understand has quite often been the case. What kind of justice would you call this?

This bill is shrewdly drawn and is aimed especially at the South. The race riots of the North do not come within the purview of the bill. It does not seek to stamp out the crime of the gangsters of the larger cities or the brutal kidnapers in many sections of our country, whose crimes are probably the most horrible of all.

There has been a steady decline in the number of lynchings as the result of improvement of the State laws and law enforcement. From 1889 to 1918 there were 3,224 lynchings in the United States. I am informed there have been a little more than 5,000 lynchings from 1882 to the present time. In 1933 there were 28; in 1936 there were 9; in 1937 there were 8; in 1938 there were 6; and last year, 1939, only 3. This certainly indicates that the State and local law-enforcement agencies are handling this problem with wonderful effect.

Of course, the peace officers, the bar, and all classes are using their influence against lynching in my section of the country. However, they will not stand for our white women to become victims of Negro rapists. The white men of the South have and will always protect their fair women from the lust and passion of brute rapists.

You can never accomplish any good by this type of legislation. You will not save the life of a single rapist, but on the other hand you may cause many rapes to be committed. For the crime of rape the South has not hesitated to administer swift and certain punishment.

It is unthinkable to imagine that the Supreme Court will hold this bill to be constitutional. The passage of this bill would be the final blow to local self-government. The proposed usurpation of States' rights was never contemplated by the Constitution.

The tragedy of this bill is to mislead the colored race and win a certain class of Negro votes in the North and West.

The Negro in the South is contented and will remain so just as long as agitators do not disturb him with propaganda and hold out false promises.

A lynching is a shocking reproach upon a local community, and it is pitiful for a political bill to be enacted into law and make capital out of a laudable desire to stamp out a fearful thing.

This bill will not reduce the crime of mob violence, but will tend to increase lynching rather than to reduce it.

The fact that only three lynchings occurred last year is sufficient proof that local governments are solving this problem and the crime is being eradicated. The record my section of the country has made in the last few years in stamping out lynching is one that should have the praise and approval of all right-thinking people, and to substitute Federal courts for the local State courts will retard the progress that we have made. [Applause.]

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER].

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, the House of Representatives now engages in its biennial performance of allowing South-haters to vent their spleen upon that section of our country, which has been outstanding in law enforcement, upon the assumption that to do so will redound to the benefit of politicians in other sections dependent for election either upon the Negro vote or upon the raising of a pseudo issue calculated to deceive at least a portion of the electorate. It is a shameful procedure, unjust and unfair to the South, which is more deeply interested than any other section in preventing lynching; a procedure calculated to injure instead of help the Negro, who, so long as most of his race live in the South, is dependent and must forever be dependent, not upon Federal laws, not upon nonresident law enforcers or Negro protectors, but upon the fairness of the southern people and their continued interest in his development and in his welfare.

If it were an issue which is to be determined upon the basis of what Members of this body consider wise legislation and good government, long and careful argument and consideration would be justified. If there were a possibility that a single vote in this body might be changed by debate, debate would be worth while. We all know, however, that the issue is already decided so far as this House is concerned. The result of the ballot on the bill can be unerringly predicted now. Under the rules of the House it is impossible to even postpone it by debate, and, therefore, there is nothing to be accomplished except to place in the RECORD the facts, which demonstrate the unwisdom, the unconstitutionality, the vicious purpose of this proposed legislation, and then depend upon the good judgment of the American people to eventually appraise the issue correctly, and upon the stalwart patriotism of southern Senators operating in another body, where minorities are still effective, to force postponement of final consideration until such time as that consideration may be obtainable in an atmosphere where logic and reason and not political purposes will prevail.

Statistics showing how the southern people have almost eradicated lynching have been placed in the RECORD. Incontrovertible legal arguments disclosing the lack of constitutional authority of Congress to enact the proposed law have been submitted in this body and in the Senate year after year.

The warnings of such distinguished northern statesmen as Mr. BORAH, of Idaho, as to the undesirability of this legislation, even from the Negro's standpoint and even if it were not in violation of the Constitution, have been disregarded by the advocates of the bill and will no doubt be disregarded again. Iron-clad opposition to efforts to have the bill apply equally to similar law violations in other sections than the South has disclosed fully the sectional, bitter, political character of the campaign for its enactment. A repetition of these arguments, except by reference, is unnecessary. The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is full of them for the benefit of those who may really be interested in trying to correctly appraise this bill.

Is it really an antilynching bill? What is lynching? Webster says in substance that it is "to inflict punishment upon or kill, without the forms of law, as by mobs or unauthorized persons." If it is desirable, if it is constitutionally possible, for the Federal Government to take over the obligations of the States to prevent or punish such offenses, why should the proposed legislation be couched in such language as to be applicable only to a class of lynching which has occurred principally in the South? Why is it so drawn that gangster and racketeer killings in the great cities of the North and East are excluded? Are these any the less "the killing without the forms of law, as by mobs or unauthorized persons"? Is human life any the less precious to the victim of a gangster mob than to the Negro who may have been arrested on a charge of offense of the diabolic character for which lynching sometimes occurs in the South? What difference does it make that in the gangster case the protection of the law may have been denied the victim because of corruption in law-enforcement channels and in the other may have been insufficiently strong to prevent violence? Are the proponents of this bill interested principally in the protection of human life or in the advancement of their own political fortunes by what they evidently regard as something which will appeal powerfully to elements in their population—South baiting?

I think the proper answers to these questions are self-evident when they are logically and calmly examined by impartial persons. After all, the problems of this country are such today as to make imperative the existence in our electorate of a majority who are persons of that type. The true American today is interested in trying to bring about that solidarity of national effort which is so vitally necessary to our national welfare and progress. It will not be accomplished by sectional attacks instigated in the main by those actuated by feelings of hatred rather than by a desire to advance the cause of law enforcement. The good people of the North, the East, the West, and the South must be relied upon to set up in their respective sections law-enforcement agencies supported by their own enlightened opinions which will accord to human life the protection without which all government ceases to be government and becomes anarchy. The Federal Government cannot by penalizing the taxpayers and law-abiding citizens of Chicago and New York for gangster killings make human life any more safe in those localities; neither can it by penalizing law-abiding people in the South increase their already vigorous and fruitful efforts to have every criminal tried and punished according to law rather than according to the momentary passions of the small element who occasionally band themselves together in mobs. Unless you can trust the people of New York, of Illinois, and of Georgia to enforce observance of their laws, the American system of government is a failure; and I know of nothing more calculated to have it fail than for one or more sections of the country to undertake to constitute themselves with arrogant and unjustified egotism the guardians of the duties and consciences of the people of another section. [Applause.]

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HARE].

Mr. HARE. Mr. Chairman, I have the distinguished honor of representing the district formerly represented by one of the greatest statesmen from my State and one of the greatest statesmen this country has ever produced, the Honorable John C. Calhoun. Naturally, therefore, I have inherited at least some of his political philosophy. From the standpoint of ability and statesmanship I feel that I am unworthy to loose the latches of his shoes, but I know I would be an unworthy successor should I fail to express my position and opposition to the bill now up for consideration.

There is a great deal more involved in this piece of legislation than an alleged desire to see uniform enforcement of an alleged offense against society. There is a great deal more involved than mere demagogic speeches made for vote-getting purposes. There is a fundamental principle involved, and to my mind it is one of the most far-reaching principles considered by this Congress in many years. It is not a new proposition. It is one which has manifested itself from time to time since the beginning of our Republic. It is an attempt to increase the powers of the Federal Government at the expense of the rights and privileges of the States.

It is elementary to say, Mr. Chairman, that when the States or the Colonies decided to create the United States they specifically and definitely, clearly and unmistakably, stated in the instrument of writing we now know as the Constitution the powers that they were delegating to the general government and the powers they were reserving unto themselves. Nowhere in the entire category will you find that the States anywhere have given the Federal Government the right to exercise powers embodied in this legislation, and yet a very intelligent set of men, presumably the most intelligent that the people of this country could select, are here today debating, seriously, apparently, as to whether or not we shall override the intentions of our forefathers, and at one stroke of the pen take away from the States a right that means the removal of the lifeblood of the individual States and, eventually, means the death of this Republic, because when you take away from the States the rights and powers involved in this bill and place them in the Federal Government the boasted democracy of this country is then sealed and doomed.

This is not the first time Congress has encroached upon the rights and powers of the States without their consent. We should remember that the Constitution provides definitely and certainly as to how the States can proceed to increase the powers delegated to the Federal Government. Nowhere did the States say, then or since, that they would delegate this power through mere acts of Congress. If the people of this country want to delegate the power carried in this bill to the Federal Congress, there is a legal and orderly way by which they can do it. We cannot continue to enact legislation thinking that the States will acquiesce and expect them to survive indefinitely.

A great deal has been said today in an effort to show that the bill before us, if enacted into law, will be constitutional. It is not my purpose to argue the matter at length, but I would like to say that the decisions of the United States Supreme Court heretofore have held it to be clearly unconstitutional. The Court construing the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution in the case of the United States v. Cruikshank et al. (92 U. S. 554) said:

Every republican government is duty bound to protect all its citizens in the enjoyment of the equality of the rights of citizens, if within its power. That duty was originally assumed by the States, and it still remains there. The only obligation resting upon the United States is to see that the States do not deny the right. This the amendment guarantees, but no more.

No State has enacted any law denying any citizen the enjoyment of equality of the rights of all citizens. The Congress, therefore, has no constitutional right whatsoever to enact legislation of this kind and thereby trespass upon the rights of the States. It is true Congress attempted and did pass a law in 1871 quite similar to that now before us but the Supreme Court held it to be unconstitutional. The law referred to provided:

If two or more persons in any State or Territory conspire, or go in disguise on the highway or on the premises of another, for the purpose of depriving, either directly or indirectly, any person or class of persons the equal protection of the laws; or for the purpose of preventing or hindering the constituted authorities of any State or Territory the equal protection of the laws; each of such persons shall be punished by a fine of not less than $500 nor more than $5,000, or by imprisonment, with or without hard labor, not less than 6 months nor more than 6 years, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

The principle there involved is the same as that found in this proposal.

Everybody here knows this is not a new bill. Similar bills have been introduced from time to time for the past three-quarters of a century, and every reasonably intelligent person here knows that it will not reduce lynching, because by the action of the people of the various States in cooperation with the State authorities the offense has been reduced to a minimum of three cases this last year. Yet the proponents of this measure profess by their arguments they are trying to save our country and save our civilization. The speeches they are making and the crocodile tears they are shedding today are not new. The same things from the same source have been said many times before.

Mr. Chairman, I want to take time here to quote from a speech made by the majority leader, Mr. Mondell, when speaking on a similar bill in 1922. After alleging that there had been an average of 105 lynchings per annum for each of the 32 years prior thereto, said:

If mob violence is left unchecked and unpunished, no man can say to what extremities it may go, to what proportions it may grow. If allowed to go unchecked, it will break down and destroy law and order and civilization. It is a thing if not stamped out will grow and spread until it will undermine the foundations of the fairest Commonwealths of the Union.

In other words, that great leader of thought and action said the same thing that is being said here today when he prophesied that if a similar bill then under consideration were not passed, lynchings would grow and increase under the laws of the different States to such alarming proportions they would undermine and destroy the foundations of the fairest States of the Union. But during these 18 years his fearful predictions have not come true. On the contrary, the States have continued to administer the law, and the number of lynchings have decreased from an average of 105 prior thereto to only 3 this past year. The records will show there has been a rapid and gradual decrease in lynchings for the past 50 years, the States are still administering justice, and their foundations have not been disturbed.

The crime of lynching is one that makes the blood of every true American run cold. I am opposed to it. Every other Member of this House is opposed to it, but the real question involved is whether the remedy shall be applied by the United States Government or by the citizens and local courts of the various States. The sum and substance of this proposal is whether the United States Government has the right to punish two or more men for murder. If this be true, then the United States Government has the right to punish one man for murder, and if it has the right to punish one man for murder it can punish another for manslaughter, it can punish another for gambling, and it can punish another for any crime that may be upon the statute books of any State.

No one should be misled as to the real purpose of this legislation, not even those who believe it to be a good vote-getting proposition. We find upon examination of the records that out of the 252 Members who voted to consider a bill similar to this one 18 years ago less than 5 percent are now in Congress, whereas 21 percent of the 100 who voted against it are still in Congress. Of course, I would not say that the vote on that occasion was the sole reason for many not being here today but it indicates that it may not be as big a vote getter as some may think. However, I assume from the vote taken to discharge the committee the bill will pass the House, but I am quite certain it will fail to pass the Senate. If it does, I still believe it will be found to be unconstitutional by the Supreme Court but, if not, I am satisfied the law will not put an end to the crime of lynching for rape, for as long as the white people of this country or another country are worth a continental, and as long as there are men who are degenerate enough to commit the crime of rape there will continue to be lynchings. One would think from the speeches made on this bill that the crime of lynching was bred, born, and nurtured in the South. As a matter of fact, rape is not a new crime and lynching is not a new punishment. It was resorted to long before the South was heard or dreamed of, long before the white man or colored man set foot on American soil, long before Columbus ever dreamed of such a country; yes, long before the days of the Christian era, for we read in Holy Writ where King David had a number of sons, one being named Absalom, who had a beautiful sister named Tamar and a half-brother named Amnon. Amnon was in love with his half-sister, Tamar, and conspired with a friend of his to violate her chastity. He feigned illness and requested that his father, David, send Tamar to cook cakes for him that he might eat, and we are told that upon this visit Amnon ravished Tamar because "he had superior force." Two years later Absalom and his servants constituted what we would today call a mob and lynched Amnon because he raped his sister. The writer does not record whether Absalom and his servants were tried and punished but the record shows that the lynching was no secret and the parties who committed the offense were all known.

I repeat, therefore, rape is not a new offense against society and lynching is not a new punishment. However, if the States are let alone and we can continue to increase in knowledge and wisdom for another century as much as we have in the last century, both rape and lynching will be offenses no longer of record in this country, and we can continue to boast of a democratic form of government where the people rule.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MITCHELL].

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Chairman, 2 years ago I stood in this Well and asked for the passage of this same bill. I am glad on this occasion to again lift my voice and ask this House to enact the bill and make it the law of the land. I agree with the gentleman who has just preceded me, who said that there is more in this bill than the mere stopping of a mob. I say to the House that the future of a large group of our citizens is wrapped up in the bill. We know what this terrible thing that we have met here to condemn has done to my group. We know what rights have been denied us by this so-called democracy, by those in authority, when it comes to administering the laws of this country, if my group is involved. I stand here this afternoon to appeal to you, to those of you who say that we want this to be a democracy in fact, to those of you who blush when we think of what is happening to minority groups in other parts of the world. I ask you to think with seriousness what American citizens here in the name of the law and civilization are doing to a minority group in this country. I have appeared in this Well several times since I have been a Member of this House. I have never made a demagogic speech, and I never expect to. I believe that on occasions like this we ought to rise to the stature of real statesmanship and I believe also that there are standing in this country at this very moment 15,000,000 people, as loyal American citizens as this country has produced, waiting to see what this Congress will do with this bill. Mr. Chairman, I represent a group of people who have been disfranchised in a large part of the country in which we live. They cannot go to the ballot boxes and say who shall be sheriff of their counties. They are not permitted to vote and exercise their citizenship rights. Men have stood on this floor and have spoken of my group as a group of rapists unworthy of trust and confidence. I say to the gentlemen who have raised that question here that these people they are calling rapists are the same people who protected their wives and daughters when they were standing at the front in the Civil War, and if we are to believe the story that appears in Gone With the Wind they did not betray their trust at that time, and they have not betrayed it since. They are laboring today under the most tremendous burden that has ever been placed on a group of people. They have been told that because they are colored they cannot hold office. They have been told that because they are colored they cannot sit on juries in this country, although the Supreme Court at a late moment said that must be reversed. They have been told that they cannot vote, that they must leave their destinies in the hands of others who will take care of them.

I heard a Member of this House yesterday recite the words of Thaddeus Stephens, and they were wretched words, but I wonder if that same gentleman would wince if I recited the words of many of the people I have heard in the Southland when talking about the rights and privileges of my own group. I lived in the South for the greater portion of my life, but now live in the Middle West. I was born in Alabama and reared in the cottonfields and the briar patches and the cornfields of Alabama. Not only was I reared there, but I was largely educated there. It was my privilege to sit at the feet of that great leader, Booker Washington. I taught school in the States of Georgia and Alabama, and not a year has ever passed over my head that I did not spend a considerable portion of my time in that section. I know conditions there and know them as well as does any Member of this House. I know it is there that we have to work out the problems of my group, and I am asking for patience, for tolerance, justice, and equal protection of the law. I have the right and the duty to ask the same treatment for the Negro that is accorded all other groups. I am asking for justice from those people who hold our destinies in their hands, and who pass the laws of this country and are charged with the responsibility of enforcing the laws of the country. And what are we asking for in this bill? We are asking for very little—the full protection of our lives and a fair trial when we are accused of crime. I cannot understand how any American citizen could ask for less. We are asking that when you accuse us of crime and take us into your courts, where your people sit as judges, where your people are the prosecutors, that you protect us from the mobs and let the courts in an impartial manner decide our case. This is accorded all other groups, no matter where they come from. Then why cannot we be tried like anyone else, and if the court condemns us, then let us go to our death or pay a penalty for our crime—a penalty no greater than would be paid by members of other groups? That is all we ask and we are entitled to that. That is all this bill asks. Are you going to cast your vote against it because it is a step to bring about our protection?

Mr. Chairman, I have here some statistics showing the large number of people who have been lynched from time to time. I shall not read them, but as a part of my remarks I ask unanimous consent that they be inserted in the Record at this point.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that under the rule the gentleman will have to obtain that permission in the House.

Mr. MITCHELL. I understood if it was something I had got together and adopted as a part of my remarks I could get that permission now. I can take the time to read these statements, but I did not want to do that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's unanimous-consent request was to include his own personal compilation?

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MITCHELL. I will put in the Record a table which will show the number of lynchings which took place in this country from 1882 to 1936. This document will show the number of white people and the number of Negroes who were lynched. Then I will show the number of people who were lynched by States. My own State of Alabama lynched 47 white people and 296 colored people. All of the States are shown in this compilation which I will insert in the Record at this point.

The statement is as follows:

Mr. MITCHELL. The causes of lynching are classified here also. It is a great travesty on truth for anyone to try to show that it is rape only that people are lynched for. This statement will show the causes of lynching. Among them are homicide, felonious assault, rape, attempted rape, robbery and theft, and insult to white persons. For that charge alone 81 people have been lynched, and all of them were colored people. Eighty-one colored people during the years that I have named have had their lives snuffed out by mobs because they were accused of being impudent to white persons. I say to you that there are places in this country, and I was in some of them last year, where, when a Negro is addressed by a white person he dare not say "Yes" or "No," as you can do here. He must say, "Yes, sir," or "No, sir," and if he speaks otherwise, his life is in danger.

This bill that we have brought here seeks to protect the lives of those people who have absolutely no means of protection. Just the other day I received a letter from the county of Oglethorpe, Ga., in which a large number of Negroes had joined and asked me to go to the Department of Justice and ask that conditions of peonage in that county be investigated. They said, "Please don't use our names. If you do, our lives will be taken by mobs." They said more than that. They said, "Don't attempt to write us. If you do it will become known that we have made this complaint and we will either be driven away or we will become the victims of the mob."

I do not know what the conditions are in Oglethorpe, Ga., except that that letter came to me, which I passed on to the Department of Justice. The Department of Justice promised me an investigation. I am mentioning some of the things which this bill means, more than stopping the mob killing of people. We want to start in some way not only to protect the lives of my people, but we want to protect them in their rights, if they have any rights here as American citizens. [Applause.] In that connection, let me say this: I have never subscribed to that doctrine that this is a white man's country. I have been down to Jamestown, Va., the spot where Capt. John Smith made the first permanent English settlement in 1607, and do you know, my friends, that just 12 years later the first permanent Negro settlement was made at that same spot at Jamestown? When I asked the guide to point out the spot where this Dutch trading vessel which brought the first 19 Negro slaves to America landed, he pointed out the very same spot where Capt. John Smith's vessel, 12 years earlier, had anchored, and his group had landed. I say to you white men that this is our country. We have sweated for it like you have. We have given our lives on every battlefield where we have been called upon to face smoking rifles and peeling cannons. By your sides we have fought those battles. By what authority do you tell me that we are not entitled to the full protection of this law?

I said a moment ago that while you were engaged in battle, many of you, especially the group that will vote against this bill—while your ancestors, your fathers were engaged in the battle to keep us slaves, we were loyal to you then. We are loyal to you now. I am not discouraged as I paint this picture. I travel through the South. I bought a farm down in the South the other day, and I expect to live in the South again. I love the South. Some day when I get through toiling here, and toiling as a lawyer in Chicago, I am going down on that farm and work at the type of work that I did as a boy. I love it. I am going south to speak in North Carolina on next Sunday. I am trying to help the group. I do not have a single word to offer that will bring bitterness to anybody, but I think it is time for us to be frank. It is time for us to be honest. I want to say to the gentlemen on my side of the House, when you accuse the Republicans on the left of playing politics—I have no word to offer for them. I know many of them are playing politics.

I remember how they played politics 2 years ago and how the distinguished gentleman to my left, Hon. HAMILTON FISH, of New York, made the fight and defeated my bill after the Judiciary Committee of the House had conducted hearings on the bill and favorably reported the bill. It was for him, playing politics, as I charge that he is doing today, to offer a motion and fight it through the House to deny me consideration of my measure, notwithstanding it had been favorably reported as heretofore stated. He stood on this floor yesterday and told the House that you had more Republicans who signed the petition to bring this bill out than you had Democrats, and he told you that we were going to have more Republican votes to pass the bill than Democratic votes. I know what the gentleman had in mind. I charge that the Republicans are trying to buy back the Negro votes with this bill. I want us to lay aside politics on that side when it comes to this legislation, and then I want us to lay aside politics on this side.

There are men on my side of the House who will speak against this bill, perhaps—at least it is my opinion—and who will expect to use that speech in their districts for reelection; but I wish we all could approach it as I am trying to. It is my racial group that has furnished the victims for this vicious thing. You represent the group that has furnished the mobs. Let me speak as I see it, the voice of those who have suffered this thing. I am asking you to let us pass this bill—let us pass it without any change except the changes that have been asked for by the author of the bill, the gentleman from New York [Mr. GAVAGAN]. Let us not emasculate it, because the bill is too important to this large minority group in this country that has always been loyal to the American Government, that has never raised its hand to strike down the representatives of this Government, and who have carried without complaining and without grumbling every burden that has been placed upon them.

I hear many of my friends on my side of the House speak of how they loved their black mammys. The thing does not, of course, sound so good to me, but it brings to my mind a certain man who talked to me in Jacksonville, Fla., last year. He said to me at a banquet where I was entertained: "I am tired of those people who 'love my mammy,' but who won't give me my rights, and I am her son." We want this love to reach beyond the black mammy; we want it to come down to us who are carrying the burden. If you love us, give us an opportunity to be citizens like anybody else.

I have in my hand a speech I put in the RECORD some time ago. This speech contains a letter that was written to me by the late-lamented Kelley Miller. We were discussing in this speech the cause of Negro migration from the South, the effect, and the remedy. Dr. Miller said this to me in his letter:

After all has been said and done, the farm holds out to the Negro not only his best chance but his only chance in face of prevailing conditions.

I said in reply to him:

I know why we are leaving the South. The more than 6,000 lynchings which have taken place in the South during the past 50 years, the disfranchisement of Negroes in the Southern States, the injustice suffered by Negroes in the courts of the South, and the unfair and inequitable distribution of educational opportunities, along with the despicable sharecropper system, have tended to drive the Negro from the farm. All of this has been said in no effort to deny or dispute anything set up in your letter.

I am merely pointing out the truth as I know it; and I will say to you that I cannot understand how you can argue the virtues of a democracy that bases its treatment of its citizens upon their color. In reply I said:

I believe that once the Negro feels that his life is safe in the South, that he will be given the same consideration in the courts as is given all people, that he will be given the same economic opportunities to work, whether in the North or in the South, the problem will be solved.

I say to this group over here: You will not let us vote and do the same things all other citizens do in the South.

I say to this group over here: You will not let us work in your shops and in your factories; you will not give us an opportunity in the economic world; yet you come up and want to kiss us and hug us and claim us as your friends. We are not unmindful of all of this hypocrisy; and it is my duty, however unpleasant and painful, to recite it here this afternoon; it is my duty to tell you the truth as God has given me the courage and the wisdom to know it and to speak it.

I want to see Negroes have the same opportunity that anybody else has. We do not ask for any more; we will not be satisfied with any less. I am saying that just as surely as we stand here and you allow these iniquities or suffer them to be visited upon us, the same thing is bound to come back to you. May I relate this story which I think quite applicable at this point: It is said that once a little child noticed its father with a foot adz and a block of wood hewing and chopping, making a rough trough. The child asked the father what he was doing. The father said: "Your old grandfather does not know how to behave at the table and I am going to feed him in this trough." It was not more than a few days later when the father noticed the little child trying to make a trough the same as he had seen his father do, and he asked the child what he was doing. The child said: "I am making a trough to feed you out of when you get old like grandfather." I want to say to you what Booker Washington said 25 or 30 years ago that if these injustices are permitted to be visited upon us—and I am not only talking about lynching; I am talking also about the group that keeps us from all of our citizenship rights—if you permit it, you will in some way have to pay the penalty, I know not how. Providence takes care of these things.

It has well been said:

The law of changeless justice
Binds the oppressor with the oppressed,
And as close as sin and suffering are joined,
They march to fate abreast.

Now, my dear friends, I want to see this bill become law. I want to see my group not discriminated against anywhere because of its color.

I want my people to be given the rights of Americans, because we are willing to do every duty that you enjoin upon us. We have done it without grumbling. How long are you going to withhold from us those rights?

I know it is a long struggle. I am conversant with the history of suffrage for the women of this country. I know that the white women stood at your doors and knocked and begged for the right to vote for a period of almost a hundred years before you permitted them to come in. Those were your wives, your daughters, and your sisters. I know that our struggle in this country is going to be a long, hard one, but what I am asking everyone to have is patience, courage, honesty, and forbearance. I want you to have the tolerance with us that you are asking groups in other parts of the world to have toward other groups. My final word is this: You have it within your power to offer encouragement to a group of 15,000,000 people who do not ask for a single special favor, but simply ask to be treated like all other American citizens. They ask that they be given the opportunity to work and make this the democracy that we all want it to be.

Mr. FISH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MITCHELL. I yield for a question.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I agree very largely with what the gentleman said—

Mr. MITCHELL. I understood I yielded for a question.

Mr. FISH. It is a question, but I would rather preface it in this way for your own interest. I agree with what the gentleman has said. He has stated it in a very able, sincere way. There is one point in his speech I would like to ask the gentleman about. The gentleman inferred that those of us on this side who advocate the bill and who were going to vote for the bill were doing so to buy back the Negro vote.

Mr. MITCHELL. Now, the question.

Mr. FISH. I want to know whether the gentleman believes that the Negro vote is for sale?

Mr. MITCHELL. I may say to the gentleman that every vote in the United States is for sale, not for money but for rights and for privileges. [Applause.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I know something about colored people myself. I want to go on record—

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Chairman, I do not yield any further. He can go on record any time he wants to.

Mr. Chairman, I want to resent the insinuation that has been offered that I said anything about the Negroes' votes being for sale. They have not been for sale, but the Republican Party has tried to use them in that way. The Republicans have been making all sorts of promises to them for 75 years. I do not know whether they called that sale, or what, but they have promised many things to us. They used us almost as chattels in our helpless condition immediately after slavery, and the gentleman knows that as well as I do. We are not for sale in the sense that he is thinking of it, and may I say to him that every man who has a vote wishes to use that vote to his advantage. That is what the Negro wants to do. The Republican Party, which he represents, has been very busy during the last 3 or 4 months trying to find some approach by which they can bring the Negro vote back to their party. I am glad he asked that question. They pretended to be very friendly to the Negro on that side of the aisle. They have had charge of the Government for many, many decades, with few exceptions. They did not send Negroes to West Point, not even the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], who wishes to be a candidate for President of the United States. What has kept him from doing that if he is so friendly toward us? Why all of this interest in the Negroes at this particular time? After I came here on the Democratic side the Negroes said to the Republican Party: "You have fooled us long enough. We are going somewhere else, where we can at least work with a group that has not fooled us." You have a distinguished Negro here in the city of Washington at this very moment whose whole duty it is—and he has been employed by the Republican National Committee—to bring the Negro vote back into the Republican fold. I want to serve notice on you that he is just as much discredited with us as is the Republican Party and he has no chance. [Applause.]

I am glad you asked that question. The day has come when you cannot fool the Negro like you used to. There are some of us who have the courage to tell the truth. We know who our friends are and we are going to stand by them. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to myself just to reiterate for the sake of the record that I do not believe the colored vote is for sale on this Federal antilynching bill or any other legislation and I do not want any such implication to be carried in the RECORD, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MITCHELL] to the contrary notwithstanding. It is an unjust and unfair reflection on the colored people of America. We on this side are voting for this legislation because we believe it is right and constitutional and as the leader on this side in the fight I want every Republican who does not believe this bill is constitutional to vote against it. I am absolutely convinced and have been for 20 years of the constitutionality of this type of legislation, the need for it and the right of the Negro people to have it. That is why we are going to fight for this Federal antilynching bill now and in the years to come until it is enacted into law as long as there is one lynching in the United States of America. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. JOHNS].

Mr. JOHNS. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with unusual interest to the address just delivered by the Congressman from Chicago. The only reason I am saying anything here today is that there are two personal observations I have made in my lifetime from which I made up my mind that if I ever had an opportunity to cure that situation I would do it, and I think the opportunity is here today.

Of course, the American people get excited very easily. Sometimes they do not take time to reflect what the consequences are going to be as a result of what they are about to do. I am not a Republican who is here seeking the Negro vote, because I do not suppose there are 25 Negroes in my district, but I know something about the Negro because I have lived in the South. I know his problems and I know the problems of the southerners. I am going to give you two observations that have come to me in my lifetime which it will be worth while for you to remember.

As a younger man I recall that back in 1903 in a small town where I was educated and went to high school a statutory crime had been committed, and it was supposed to have been committed by two men. The mayor of the city knew these men very well and he immediately went on their bond. It was the hardest thing in the world for the good citizens of that small town in the State of Wisconsin to keep the people in that town from committing violence on the mayor of the city. Of course later on when the excitement subsided this man was given many honors. He was reelected mayor of the city and given other honors.

My other observation was made when I was a law student at Chattanooga, Tenn., and I believe it may be well for you to make note of this. At that time a crime was committed there and a Negro was tried. He was defended by two of the best criminal lawyers in the State of Tennessee. He was convicted, but during the trial he was required to step into a box in which sand had been placed in order that an imprint of his foot might be taken. These two criminal lawyers took out a writ of error to the Supreme Court of the United States on the ground that the Negro had been denied his constitutional right of not being compelled to testify against himself.

At school that evening the dean said, "There is a rumor around that a Negro is going to be hung down here tonight. I do not want you boys to go anywhere near there." If he had not said anything about it perhaps nobody would have thought anything about it, but after the classes were over I walked down to see what was going on. The first man I saw there was the dean. There were some machine guns there and they began to spit fire. I was far enough away so the bullets did not hit me, and I got out of range. They did not hang the Negro that evening, but some 3 days later they did take him out and hang him to the bridge across the Tennessee River.

In the meantime, the two criminal lawyers had taken out a writ of error to the Supreme Court of the United States and the Negro became a Federal prisoner. Within 24 hours secret agents from the Department of Justice were in Chattanooga to make observations of what was going on there. They talked quite freely about the matter.

It was not very long until the sheriff and two of his deputies were summoned before the Supreme Court of the United States for contempt of court because they did not protect this Negro who was in jail. As I recall, this was in 1905 or 1906. As a result, they were tried before the Supreme Court of the United States and sentenced, one of them, I believe, to 90 days and the others to 60 days each, as I now recall.

I happened to be in Chattanooga at the end of that time when these men came back. Ten thousand people came out to greet the sheriff and his deputies when they returned. This was sometime during the summer. That fall the sheriff was a candidate for office, but was beaten by a Republican by a large majority, the first time in many, many years. As I recall, the late Judge McReynolds, who sat here in this Congress, was the young judge who sat on the bench at the time this Negro was convicted.

I am going to vote for this bill, not because I feel that anyone from the South is against it, or anyone from the North, particularly, is for it. I am for this bill because I believe in law and order, and I think this is one way to put an end to lynching in this country. Certainly we have too much disobedience to law at the present time.

I recall 2 or 3 years ago making an investigation of the cost of crime in this country and found it was approximately $13,000,000,000 each year. J. Edgar Hoover said a few days ago in an article that the cost of crime is now $15,000,000,000 each year. What we want to do is to put some laws on the statute books so that people cannot get so excited as they have in the past and cause us all the trouble we have had in the past and cost us the amount of money we have to spend each year to take care of this situation. This is the reason I shall vote for this bill. Notwithstanding what the Congressman from Chicago has said, I am still in favor of this bill for the reasons I have given you. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON] such time as he may desire.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I oppose lynching, and I oppose Federal antilynching legislation. The bill under consideration is similar to the bill passed by the House in 1937. Revisions have been made, but the purpose is substantially the same. In fact, the bill is similar to the Dyer bill which passed the House some 15 years ago, and to the Wagner-Costigan bill that was defeated in the Senate some 5 years ago. The Gavagan bill that passed the House in 1937 never came to a vote in the Senate. The pending bill will in all probability pass the House, but fortunately the indications are it will not pass the Senate.

The bill states that its provisions are within the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution, and that its purpose is to protect persons charged with or suspected or convicted of any offense within the jurisdiction of the several States. The terms "mob" and "lynching" are defined. It is significant that an exception was made in defining lynching with respect to violence occurring in connection with labor disputes. The gentleman from New York [Mr. GAVAGAN] has stated that he will move to strike out that exception. The fact that the exception is contained in the bill, however, is conclusive proof that the purpose underlying the bill is purely political. It is amusing to observe that certain Democrats are vying with certain Republicans in claiming credit for the legislation.

The bill provides that upon conviction any officer or employee of any State or governmental subdivision shall be guilty of a felony, if such officer neglects or refuses to make diligent efforts to protect his prisoner from lynching. Upon conviction such officer may be fined not to exceed $5,000 or may be imprisoned not to exceed 5 years, or such officer, if convicted, may be punished by both such fine and imprisonment.

The bill directs the United States Attorney General to make an investigation upon complaint that any such officer has neglected or refused to protect the prisoner or prisoners in his custody from lynching. It makes every governmental subdivision in which such officer neglects or refuses to use diligence to protect his prisoners from being lynched liable to pay to the kin of the person lynched not less than $2,000 nor more than $10,000. The compensation may be recovered by civil action in the United States court, and the case is to be conducted by the Attorney General or by counsel employed by the claimant. The Federal district court is to have jurisdiction, and if there is a lynching, the officers are prima facie guilty of neglect. The fact of lynching shall be prima facie evidence of liability.

The purpose of the legislation is, therefore, to give the Federal district courts jurisdiction with respect to lynching.

PUBLIC SENTIMENT

Laws that are not supported by public sentiment, whether national or local, inevitably fail. The Federal prohibition laws were not enforced where public sentiment opposed prohibition. This is parallel legislation. If public sentiment favors mob violence, neither State nor Federal laws punishing mob violence will be enforced. The remedy is not legislation but the cultivation of a sound public sentiment and education of the public conscience against the horrible crime of lynching. Laws within the breast are stronger than graven laws on stone, and laws that are demanded by public sentiment are far better than laws on the printed statute. We need really fewer laws and more law enforcement. The remedy for lynching is not more legislation but the enforcement of existing local laws. A law that is not reinforced and supported by public sentiment will do more harm than good.

I abhor mob violence. I will continue to oppose lynching under any and all circumstances. I propose to be helpful and not hurtful. I believe that those who oppose lynching will be more helpful if they would spend less time in sympathizing with the victims and would spend more time in denouncing the horrible crimes that cause lynching. Sympathy with those who commit crimes will lead to a repetition of the crime, but denunciation and opposition will prevent a repetition.

UNCONSTITUTIONAL

The centralization of power in the Federal Government is a menace to the freedom and rights of the people. There are certain functions that are Federal, but all powers not delegated to the Federal Government are retained by the States. The bill under consideration is an invasion of the rights of the States. It is therefore unconstitutional.

The bill is not within the fourteenth amendment. It has been repeatedly held that the fourteenth amendment is a limitation upon the power of the States. This amendment does not undertake to deal with individuals. It is therefore inapplicable to the individual as a member of a mob. The amendment does prevent discrimination among citizens. It was never intended as a limitation upon individuals. The police powers have been reserved by the States. Murder and other crimes are within the jurisdiction of the States.

The fifth amendment to the Constitution of the United States is inapplicable. The Supreme Court has held that this amendment respecting "the due process of law" is a limitation of the power of the Federal Government. I have no doubt as to the unconstitutionality of the bill.

LYNCING DISAPPEARING

I have said that whatever may be the motive of the sponsors of the pending bill, the purpose is purely political. The appeal is for the Negro vote. The bill does not solve the problem. I am interested in the elimination of mob violence wherever it may occur.

In the last analysis it is difficult to say which suffers the most—the members or the victims of a mob. Mob violence brings shame to the good name of the State and of the community. It will be eliminated by the education of the citizenship against its perpetration. Lynching is murder. The need is not more laws, but the enforcement of laws that already exist. These laws can only be enforced if public sentiment favors their enforcement. Pleas for the enforcement of laws against lynching should always be accompanied by a denunciation of the crimes that lead to lynching and to mob violence. The best way to eliminate lynching is to eliminate the crimes that lead to lynching. There must be an education of those who perpetrate these crimes as well as all those who engage in lynch law. Education of both the perpetrators and training of the victims will lead to the elimination of mob violence.

From 1882 to 1892 there was an average of 155 lynchings annually; from 1893 to 1903, the average was 133. In the decade from 1904 to 1914, the average was 69. For the 10 years 1915 to 1925, it was 50. In the decade from 1926 to 1936, the average was 16 annually. In 1936 there were 8 lynchings; in 1937 there were 8; in 1938 there were 6, and for the year 1939, 3.

While the purpose of the bill is political, it is aimed at the South. Race problems, whether in Germany or in the United States, are difficult. The problem is not easy in the South. The white man of the South knows the Negro better than any other white man. The white people and the Negroes of the South, if given the opportunity, will solve the problem. Those from other parts of the country should cooperate in the solution of that problem. Public sentiment in the South has been crystallized against mob violence. The present generation of southern leaders oppose lynching. As shown by the statistics mentioned, lynching is disappearing. If local laws and public sentiment have almost completely solved the problem, why should the Federal Government undertake to assume jurisdiction over the crime of lynching? I repeat that lynching is nothing more nor less than murder. If the Federal Government can assume jurisdiction in one crime it can assume jurisdiction in all crimes. States' rights will disappear.

CONSIDERATION

This bill is not being considered in the usual and ordinary course of congressional legislation. It is before the House at this critical time when other and more pressing public problems are demanding the attention of Congress because Members of Congress have voluntarily provided for prior consideration by signing a discharge petition. It is to be regretted that other and pressing legislation must stand aside while futile efforts are made to enact the pending bill.

CRIMINALS PROTECTED

It is significant that the pending bill provides no protection for the innocent and undertakes to give no aid to the law-abiding citizen, whether white or black. It only provides aid and assistance and the payment of compensation to the relatives of criminals or those charged with crime. The law-abiding citizen may be murdered and his family left in want, but no provision is made for him.

PROTECTION OF THE INNOCENT IMPERILED

The State and local officers should protect their prisoners. If the Federal Government only can protect, lawlessness will prevail. The safety of those whom the pending legislation would aid will be imperiled. Local protection will be undermined.

Not only does the bill contemplate no protection for the innocent and for the law-abiding, but it singles out in the evident appeal to racial prejudice the single crime of lynching. Mob violence is detestable, but it is no more detestable than gangsterism. I deplore mob violence in the South. At the same time I deplore gangsterism, whether it occurs in New York or in Chicago. One is no better than the other. I oppose both; yet the pending bill omits punishment for the gangster, whether his victim be white or black, rich or poor. If the proponents are advocating enforcement of law, why not include the gangster?

CONCLUSION

A Federal antilynching law is wholly unnecessary. It is not only unwise but it is unconstitutional as an invasion of the rights of the States. If Congress can provide for levying a fine on a county, then it can provide for levying a fine on a State. The rights of the States will thus disappear. If the Federal Government alone is to protect prisoners, or those charged with crime, the local law enforcement will become more and more lax. The very object of those who protect the innocent and give to all a trial according to law will be defeated. The pending legislation is unwise.

I want to aid and assist the leaders in all parts of the United States, and particularly in the South, who are shaping and molding public sentiment against mob violence. They have emphasized that the solution of the problem lies in urging all citizens to obey the law and in the promotion of a public sentiment against lynching. The pending bill will promote and not hinder lynching.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK].

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, I listened with much interest, and sympathetic interest, I may say, to the remarks of the gentleman from Chicago a few moments ago. He very ably presents the case for the colored people. No doubt the measure he offered 2 years ago was better than this bill.

I find it necessary for me to oppose this proposed legislation for exactly the same reason I offered on April 15, 1937, when practically the same bill was being considered. On that occasion I was allotted a few minutes and I explained why I intended to vote against it. Having just turned back to those remarks on page 3559 of volume 87, part 3, of the Seventy-fifth Congress, I find the case the same now. I doubt the constitutionality of this measure.

I, like the gentleman from Mississippi who has just spoken, oppose mob violence. I am opposed to lynchings. Surely we ought to find some way much better than this to protect the rights of all minority groups. However, I do not believe this proposed legislation, if written on the Federal statute books, would be in the interest of the colored people themselves. We have learned that we cannot legislate morals. Such a law as this would stir up race hatred. My mind is more firmly made up than it was on April 15, 1937, that this measure is unconstitutional as well as very unwise. [Applause.]

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY].

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Chairman, I was very much interested a while ago to hear the Congressman from Illinois speak on this subject. While I am opposed to what he is contending for today, I think the colored race can be very proud of the Congressman from Illinois, because he is an outstanding member of their group. It was of interest to me and a matter of peculiar significance that the Congressman from Illinois did not lay any stress upon the necessity of this bill at this time, and did not contend that this bill had the active support of the colored leaders of the South, the part of the country which is supposed to be directly and vitally concerned with this bill. By his failure to make such contention he impliedly admits that such leaders have not given the bill their support. And the truth is that the Negro leaders of the South are not pressing for this bill, but that it is being sponsored by the gentleman from New York [Mr. GAVAGAN] and other Representatives from districts in the North with heavy colored voting populations, at the behest of the so-called Harlem colored group and similar groups in the northern cities.

I am against the passage of the Gavagan so-called anti-lynching bill, because, in the first place, in my opinion it is unconstitutional; second, because in the light of statistics on the subject it is endeavoring to control, it is wholly unnecessary; and, third, because it is a purely political gesture used as a colored vote getter in certain sections of the country and is a direct slap at the South, that section of the country which has held together the great Democratic Party during the lean years of Republican domination.

It is an elementary principle of constitutional law that the Federal Government has only such powers as are given it under the Constitution, and that all other rights are retained by the several States. The Federal Government must find its power to punish crimes in laws of Congress passed in pursuance of the Constitution. No act can be a crime against the United States which does not come under the terms of the Federal Constitution.

The Gavagan bill is sought to be enacted under the provisions of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution. It is an elementary principle that the fourteenth amendment is directed at State action only and not at the action of individuals.

A number of statutes have been passed in the last several years giving the Federal courts jurisdiction over crimes not theretofore within their province, but these crimes were directly concerned with violations under the interstate commerce clause, and the crossing of State lines, such as the theft of automobiles taken across State lines, and kidnappings which involve the crossing of State lines.

No Member who has spoken in favor of this bill has given us a valid reason as to why it should be passed at this time. If the crime of lynching were on the increase and a showing made that the States have not tried to enforce their own criminal laws there might be some justification, moral if not legal, for the passage of such a law by the Congress. But such is not the case. It has been stated by numerous speakers today that the crime of lynching has had a steady decline in the several States. This has not been denied by the most ardent advocates of the bill. The statistics show it to be a fact. The States are rapidly stamping out this dreadful crime without any aid or outside interference on the part of the Federal Government. The Negro leaders of the South and the white people of that section, by campaigns of education and better law enforcement have brought about the almost total elimination of this evil. Why should our northern friends so much concern themselves with the passage of a law the need for which, if it ever existed at all, has disappeared?

In 1892 lynching reached a highwater mark in this country with 231 lynchings in a population of 65,000,000. Of these, 162 were colored and 69 white.

In 1939, with a population of 130,000,000 in this country, lynchings had dropped to 3—or about 1 lynching for every 44,000,000 inhabitants. Of these, 2 occurred in Florida, one a white man accused of murder who was shot by members of his own race, and the other a Negro charged with the death of a white boy in an automobile accident. The third lynching was that of a Negro in Mississippi after an altercation with a white man.

Surely, in the light of the admitted statistics there is no need for the Congress to take up its valuable time to pass the Gavagan bill.

It may be interesting to note that while there were 3 lynchings in the United States in 1939, during the same time I understand there were 12,000 murders, including gangster killings of all degrees of atrociousness. And yet our Representatives from above Mason and Dixon's line do not appear to have worried themselves very much about seeking Federal intervention in those cases.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that we are witnessing here this afternoon an attempt to pass a bill which, if passed and upheld by the Supreme Court, to which it no doubt will find its way, will be the opening wedge in doing away with the rights of the States to enforce their own criminal laws. It will impose a super court over the courts of the States concerning their own police powers. It will be the forerunner of centralization in Washington of all criminal law enforcement. We have heard a great deal said upon the part of the minority party of late years about States' rights, and yet those Members who are voting for this bill will be casting their votes for an act, the consequence of which will be to obliterate all State enforcement of criminal laws. The bill should be defeated. [Applause.]

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to use to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, in my opinion, this bill is unconstitutional and I am opposed to it. It would take away from the various States of the Union the police power which is vested in the States under the Federal Constitution. It would abrogate the very fundamentals of States' rights. It would make county peace officers and prosecuting officers liable for punishment of 5 years in the penitentiary and/or $5,000 fine. This penalty could be imposed even when such officers were blameless and helpless in the crime of lynching. It would go further than this in that it would impose a penalty of as much as $10,000 on any county in the United States whereas lynching occurred. This would cause innocent taxpayers and innocent citizens to suffer and in this is a clear violation of the Bill of Rights. I cannot vote for a measure which would so erroneously and unjustly place such penalties upon the officers and taxpayers of the counties of my district. I, of course, am opposed to lynching and, for that matter, opposed to all crime, but this bill is the wrong approach as a cure for this evil. [Applause.]

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. DISNEY].

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Chairman, we have observed by the chart furnished by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] that lynchings have gone down from the number of 158 in 1892 to 3 in the last year—2 Negro lynchings and 1 white lynching. Out of 12,000 killings in the Nation during the last year 3 were lynchings.

According to the chart, the number of lynchings went down to nearly nothing; but the chart of centralization of power in the Federal Government, in its fiscal aspects, has traveled up and up and up, until last year our appropriations approached $8,000,000,000, and this year we are asked for appropriations of $8,500,000,000. Just when are we going to cease this extension of power in the Federal Government, and just when are we going to stop this centralization, not in this alone but in all aspects, giving the dictator, when he comes, every weapon that he needs to perpetuate himself as some kind of an executive over these, the free people of the United States of America?

To you lawyers in the House and those who believe in the Constitution, let me suggest that even Thaddeus Stevens, the originator of the fourteenth amendment, made no claim that the inhibition contained therein was against the individual—either an individual per se or as an officer. His only claim on the passage of the fourteenth amendment was that it was a prohibition applied to the States, providing that the States by law should not deny the equal protection of the law to its citizens.

In the local communities is where democracy begins, and there is the safeguard of democracy in the local community. The worst enemy of democracy is further centralization of power in the Federal Government. Under the dome of this Capitol, as the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee said this morning, is where the Constitution is being violated most of all places; and if we in Congress do not respect the Constitution, how can we expect the average citizen to give it more credence or be more zealous in preserving its integrity than we ourselves?

My Negroes in my district—who are registered to vote, they vote, and their votes are counted—respect the Constitution. They love the Constitution, they want the Constitution retained, and they want it retained as it is, because they know that under that Constitution they have the right of habeas corpus, the right of prohibition against unlawful searches and seizures of their dwellings, the right to go and come as they please, to contract and to do as they please with all due regard to their friends and neighbors, and they are for the Constitution. They are law-abiding people. My Negroes are not going to be fooled on this bill by either the white politicians or the black racketeers. This bill is unconstitutional, and my Negroes do not want the Constitution violated, either by the people or the Congress.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me for an observation with particular reference to the statement of the gentleman about the falling off in the number of lynchings in the South?

Mr. DISNEY. Yes.

Mr. COX. I would say to the gentleman that the improvement to which he refers does not represent a change of attitude on the part of the white people toward riots, nor does it evidence a relaxation on their part to any effort to break down the color line, but it is largely, if not altogether, due to the improved conduct of the Negro himself.

Mr. DISNEY. I have no doubt that is true. I think it is true in my own neighborhood. The Negroes in my country are respected, they are treated well by the white people, and they believe in law observance amongst themselves as well as by the Congress of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes more to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Chairman, in this struggle over this political bill—and gentlemen must concede privately, if not publicly, that this bill is simply political vagabondage—in its effort to make this look respectable; and picketings by labor unions were exempted; and now we find that that section is to be taken out. What does labor say about that? The provision in last year's bill that provided that a Federal judge may declare certain portions of our States a Federal district and set up a little Federal domain is also out of the bill. An effort has been made to make this bill look constitutional, but a rose by any other name would smell just as sweet, and vice versa. Surely gentlemen who have studied the fourteenth amendment and its history will not contend that any court beyond the pale of political influence would hold it to be constitutional.

The collection of money from a municipality is a matter of right on the part of the people. Under our law in Oklahoma there are certain ways to take money out of the treasury, so in an attempt to collect a judgment against the county in my State under this bill it would be impossible to do so. Certain rules must be lived up to by the officers who spend public money in my State, and under this bill he is compelled to pay by a Federal process in a manner in which he is prohibited to exercise by State process. The officer would have to go to jail either under the State or the Federal law. So we are groping in the dark with this thing.

I shall address myself now on the record again to the Negroes in my district, and inquire of those good people whether or not they would prefer to be tried in a State or a Federal court. This law applies to blacks and whites alike. Blacks sometimes riot, themselves, and any group of blacks, more than three, come under the purview of this law, and I inquire of my Negroes whether or not they would prefer, in case they make a mistake and take part in a riot, to be tried in a Federal court, with a substantially hand-picked jury, or in a State court, before judges for whom they have the right every 4 years to vote in the matter of the choice of judges. I think these black people would vastly prefer to enter the State court rather than the Federal court. I make this observation on this ground: That under the law providing that accessories to a crime are also liable, the members of a mob, under this strange piece of legislation, could be indicted and tried with the officers held liable.

As I said, Mr. Chairman, this bill appears to be political vagabondage of the very worst kind. Let me warn again that the constant extension of Federal power, followed in its wake by 11 consecutive deficits, is aimed directly, although apparently innocently, at the complete destruction of democracy as we know it, and understand it, and have believed in it. It is in violation of the American way, which whites and blacks alike believe in and desire to maintain. If you give this power to the man on horseback when he comes, it will be very useful to him when he can send his Federal minions to the statehouse of any State—yes; to the States of the gentlemen I am talking to—and put the manacles of the law on the Governor of that State under some real or pretended claim that the Governor was not enforcing the law of the State. When that is done, then I ask gentlemen to look back to their votes in this House of Representatives under the dome of the Capitol when they invaded the right of the community to determine its police power and turned it over to the Federal authority. Mr. Chairman, this is nothing more or less than tyranny. Not a man on either side of this House but has said sometime within the last few years that we cannot trust the Federal departments. Can you trust the man on horseback when he comes with this as one of his additional implements of power? [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 20 seconds to make the announcement that the reason for the differentiation in respect to the last distinguished speaker from the others is because the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary promised the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. DISNEY] 10 minutes. I now yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. DOXEY].

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Chairman, I thank my distinguished friend from Alabama, Judge HOBBS, for this time. Whether it be 5 minutes or 5 hours, we cannot defeat this bill in the House. Therefore, I ask leave to extend and revise my remarks at this point.

I full well realize that no matter what I might say or try to do to prevent the passage of this bill, generally known as the Gavagan-Fish Federal antilynching bill, it is going to pass this House. In fact, I do not believe anybody can keep this House as it is presently constituted from passing this antilynching bill known as H. R. 801. However, I am confident that this bill will be killed in the Senate. It should be.

Of course, we all understand that the Senate has different rules of procedure to what the House has. We cannot filibuster here in the House. Our time is exceedingly limited but in the Senate, it is different. I wish we could filibuster in the House. If we could, this bill would never pass this House. It can be, has been, and will be filibustered to death in the Senate.

However, should such a thing happen as this bill being passed by the Senate, and should the President of the United States sign such a bill, anyone who has studied the bill knows full well that it would very promptly be declared unconstitutional by any court of competent jurisdiction considering its constitutionality.

The language of the bill is a mockery. Its purpose is a fraud. Its effect, if enacted into a law, is hard to prophesy except to say that those of us who know the real significance behind this bill know that it is being pushed now for political purposes mainly.

The very idea here at the very beginning of this last session of the Seventy-sixth Congress when we have got so much to do and so many vital and pressing problems confronting us that the first order of business before us is this antilynching bill.

The whole thing is preposterous, absurd, and ridiculous.

Those of us from the South realize that we are outnumbered, and of course it is votes that count here, and we know that many of our colleagues north of Mason and Dixon's line who are voting for this measure—down deep in their hearts—are doing so with the main motivating power being politics.

I have opposed all such type of legislation and have spoken against it and have always worked against it and have done my best to keep this measure from coming up on the floor of this House not only at this time but at any other time for many reasons that time will not permit me to discuss here in detail. However, even the most ardent advocate of this present bill that we are considering cannot justify the necessity for it.

We have only had three lynchings in the South during the past year, 1939, and one of them was in my State of Mississippi. I regret that one.

We all agree that lynching is a horrible thing, and we all are opposed to lynching, but do let us, of the South, handle our problems of this character in the South in our own way. We, of the South, are doing a wonderful job in preventing lynchings, as the record will show; each year lynchings in the South have decreased manifold.

Each State has its own laws against lynchings. The responsibility is local and not national.

This bill does not affect gangsters or many other sorts of crime that are in the same category as lynchings.

This bill would tend to increase crime instead of preventing it; it would prevent officers of the law from doing their duty; it would subjugate them and would subject governmental subdivisions in the State to harassments of all kinds, indictments, and damage suits that would clutter up the courts, create feelings of ill-will, and even stir up racial strife, so that those of us who live peaceably and who want to continue to live at peace with each other would suffer as a result of this inflammatory legislation. It is impossible to enforce such a Federal law.

This bill is so worded that it sounds good to the unsuspecting and to those who may be deluded by the language of the bill, but in the last analysis, if this bill should ever be enacted into a law, it would not mean a thing but misery and would rise up to plague this country in the future.

Such legislation sets a dangerous precedent. The purposes set forth in the bill are just glittering generalities held out only as a sop to try to catch the Negro vote.

Those of you, who know the colored man as I know him, know that we of the South are his best friends, and he knows that better than anyone else, but we know that this kind of a proceeding by what is supposed to be the greatest deliberative legislative body in the world is purely a sham and a mockery.

In a way I know it is a vain thing for me or any other man to take up the time of this House to try to analyze this bill or discuss its various provisions. The constitutional phase of this measure has time and time again been discussed, but with all those facts well known, the sponsors of this proposed legislation bring this bill up in this fashion and ram it down our throats just because we who are against it are greatly outnumbered by votes and we are helpless to prevent its passing under the parliamentary procedure that prevails in this House, but, as I have said before, I think the Senate will, because it can, prevent this measure from becoming a law.

To read the caption of the bill is but to know that it was conceived in iniquity and born of hypocrisy. It is demagogery of the worst sort.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SECCOMBE].

Mr. SECCOMBE. Mr. Chairman, I intend to vote for this bill as a matter of principle, with the feeling it is absolutely constitutional, and not as a matter of trying to buy anyone's vote, as stated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MITCHELL] a few moments ago.

I also wish to remind him that this is not a racial question, because there have been more white people lynched than those of the black race. But, in order to keep the record straight, I want to read into the RECORD a letter written by the Congressman from the First District of Illinois, Mr. ARTHUR W. MITCHELL. I have a photostatic copy of the letter. It is dated November 3, 1939, written to one of his constituents:

Mr. JOSEPH PARVIS,
2600 Calumet Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

MY DEAR MR. PARVIS: I am in receipt of your letter of November 1, and in reply I write to say that I shall be very glad to take your case up with the Work Projects Administration, if you will get a letter from your ward committeeman requesting me to handle this matter for you.

It is an unbroken rule of the Democratic organization in Chicago that each person seeking help from his Congressman must first get a letter from his ward committeeman requesting the Congressman to take care of the matter. I must therefore insist that you get a letter from your committeeman first, and then I shall be very glad to do everything in my power to help you.

With very best wishes, I am,

Cordially and sincerely yours,

ARTHUR W. MITCHELL,
Member of Congress, First District, Illinois.

I wonder if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MITCHELL] is just as sincere in taking care of some of his Republican colored gentlemen as he is some of his Democratic gentlemen? I think this is a question of principle, and I think this betrays his sincerity in trying to claim who is Santa Claus and who is not, and who is trying to buy colored votes and who is not. I have the highest regard for the colored race, and it is on that principle that I intend to vote for this bill. But if anyone ever talked against a just bill in behalf of the colored people, then certainly the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MITCHELL] did this afternoon. I think he should have some explaining to do to the white people as well as the colored people in his district, and to the people of this Nation, as to the contents of this letter, where he plays politics with the necessities and privileges of his constituents. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McDOWELL] 5 minutes.

Mr. McDOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MITCHELL] left the Chamber, as I believe I could tell him something that he does not know.

Mr. FISH. The gentleman from Illinois is present.

Mr. McDOWELL. I am glad he is here. Despite his obvious efforts to alienate votes on the Republican side of the House, 98 percent of them are still going to vote for this bill.

Mr. Chairman, were I not to support this measure with my vote, I would betray the thousands of colored citizens whom I represent in the Thirty-first District of Pennsylvania. Were I not to support this measure with my vote, I would betray the traditions of my family for four generations, who spoke and fought and used what talents and ability they had to establish and protect the vast number of colored citizens of the United States, and to include them under the Constitution of the Nation as human beings and not property.

One of my blood established and maintained an underground station in Pennsylvania for the forceable freeing of slaves before the Civil War. Many of them fought in that war. My county of Allegheny voted en masse for Abraham Lincoln on the sole issue of giving the black man citizenship. The day I was born I was laid in the lap of a black woman, and her great heart and gentle kindness are one of my fondest memories.

In my district and in my county there are thousands upon thousands of Negroes who were born in the old South, and who left the home of their ancestors that they might be free from the eternal threat of violence and that they might have the opportunity of living as American citizens under the protection of the Constitution of both the United States and the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

Pennsylvania recognizes the rights of all of its citizens. There is no distinction there between races or colors or creeds.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McDOWELL. I yield.

Mr. MITCHELL. Can colored teachers work in the public schools of Pittsburgh?

Mr. McDOWELL. Colored teachers can work there. There is no law keeping them out.

Mr. MITCHELL. But there is a custom that keeps them out. That is what I am talking about.

Mr. CORBETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McDOWELL. I yield.

Mr. CORBETT. I have been a school teacher in the county of Allegheny, which the gentleman represents, and colored teachers do teach there.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am talking about Pittsburgh.

Mr. CORBETT. The same is very definitely true there.

Mr. McDOWELL. Insofar as I know, since the Commonwealth removed all barriers between the races there have been no difficulties, no physical incidents, no attacks upon Pennsylvania's fair womanhood, and none of the horrible black violence that is so eloquently painted by these brilliant speakers from the deep South.

Mr. Chairman, we who support this bill are being accused of voting thusly purely for political purposes. Speaking for Pennsylvania, may I refute that in one sentence by saying that the great mass of the half million colored people in Pennsylvania are not of my political faith, nor do I anticipate that they will be.

In my district resides one of the most distinguished colored citizens of America. He is a Democrat. He has served his State and his country as an attorney. He has served as a high official of the present administration in Washington, and he is the publisher of the Pittsburgh Courier, with the largest circulation of any colored newspaper in the world. Both he and his newspaper have proven beyond all peradventure of a doubt that an intelligent black man is not one wit different from an intelligent white man, in character and in ideals.

The black people of our State have been an asset. They work in our stores, our mills and mines and factories, our farms and forests, and have never been a problem to Pennsylvania. They are good citizens. They have been good soldiers; and I pay a tribute to these religious, law abiding, patriotic citizens of my State by voting to give the same chance to their black brethren all over America that they have been given in Pennsylvania.

The record of lynchings in America is one of the blackest blots on her shield. The horrors of a bloodthirsty, lawless, cruel mob are known to all of us. What Member of Congress has the right to stand on this floor and insist that the orderly processes of justice of America are not sufficient to protect its citizens, whether they live above or below the Mason and Dixon's line?

The intermingling of white and black society in America will never be; we all realize that. The intermingling of white blood and black blood will never occur. Neither the whites nor the blacks desire it, but it is the old time-worn spook which is dragged out upon every occasion to threaten those who insist that America be just and tolerant and that an ancient and wrong prejudice and hatred be forever eliminated in our Nation.

The black people are generations removed from the savagery of the African jungles. We have a right to protect them. All of us here swore an oath to defend and protect the Constitution of the United States, and these Negroes of America have the same right under that Constitution for protection as do we who are white. Let America take another step forward by passing this measure.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE].

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, for the last 60 or 70 years earnest efforts have been made to rebuild the United States into one great Nation, united and free of sectionalism, a Nation of many climates, many interests, and many advantages, but with no distinctions between North, East, South, or West.

It is true that some sections have problems that are unknown or uncommon to other parts of the country, but it was hoped that those local problems would be understood by the people in other sections and friendly, kindly, and sympathetic consideration would be extended those who have the responsibility of working out such local problems. They are of such nature that force, either of arms or law, will not contribute to their solution.

I want to see my country grow great through the sympathetic understanding of the people of each section for the other, through an appreciation of each other's local conditions and friendly cooperation in their consideration. Only by such methods can we all contribute our full measure to the happiness and prosperity of a united people. While I am a son of the South—and I hope worthy of the heritage—I have never sought and will never ask for the South anything more than it is justly entitled to or more than I will freely grant and give to every other section of the Nation.

All I ask today is that you leave us alone and let us handle and settle our peculiar and strictly local problems in our own way and to the best interests of all concerned. This bill under consideration—the so-called antilynching bill—brought here by the gentleman from New York, who represents the Harlem district of New York City, is an effort to try to tell the people of the South, and by force of law to make the people of the South handle one of their most serious home problems in a particular way.

In your heart of hearts you Members of the House know that a law of the kind here proposed is wholly unnecessary, uncalled for, untimely, unreasonable, and unconstitutional. It violates every sense of decency and respect. It is intended and will be accepted as an insult to the home-loving people of the South. In plain language, it is no more and no less, as you all well know, than an effort to try to please the large Negro vote of the North. It is a matter of deep regret to me to see it offered here by a Democrat, a member of my own party. There have been times in the past when the Democratic Party was kept alive by the people of the South, and it seems to me that efforts of this kind are mighty poor evidence of appreciation and party harmony.

I have said that such a law as this is unnecessary and that the people of the South can handle their own race problems. Here is the proof—an Associated Press dispatch of last Monday, January 1, 1940. Let me read it to you:

According to the reports compiled in the department of records and research of Tuskegee Institute, there were 3 persons lynched in 1939. This is 3 less than the number 6 for the year 1938; 5 less than the number 8 for each of the years 1937 and 1936; and 17 less than the number 20 for the year 1935. Two of the persons lynched were taken from the hands of the law—one from the jail and the other from an officer of the law outside the jail.

There were 18 reports of instances in which officers of the law prevented lynchings. All of these instances were in Southern States. In all instances the persons were removed or the guards augmented or other precautions taken. A total number of 25 persons—5 white men and 20 Negro men—were thus saved from the hands of mobs.

Of the persons lynched, two were Negroes and one was white. The offenses charged were: Murder, one; fatal injury to boy in automobile accident, one; altercation with man, one.

The States in which lynchings occurred and the number in each State are as follows: Florida, two; Mississippi, one.

I understand the two men lynched in Florida were joint offenders and received their punishment at the same time, so it appears that last year there were only two lynchings in the whole Nation. In spite of your eagerness for that Negro vote in the North, can you not admit that we are doing a pretty good job of solving this problem ourselves?

Take a look at the record: From 1882 to 1892 there was an average of 155 lynchings each year. This was 1 for each 300,000 in population. During the next 11 years, from 1893 to 1903, there was an average of 133 each year, or 1 for each 555,000 people in the United States. Then for the next 11 years, 1904 to 1914, there was an average of 89 lynchings each year, which was 1 for each 1,300,000 people. As the years have passed, lynchings have become less and less. In 1935 there were 20; in 1936, only 9; in 1937, only 8; in 1938 there were only 6; and last year, 1939, there were only 2, involving 3 lives. Think of it—from an average of 155 each year, at the rate of 1 for each 300,000 population, down to 2, or 1 for each 65,000,000 people.

I challenge the gentleman from New York and every other Member of this House to cite a similar record anywhere, any time. That is not the record of crime in your big cities. You have crime waves after crime waves. In many places your police and court authorities have joined in with your gangsters and racketeers and decent people are almost without protection. And yet you come here and wail about the awful crime of lynching and try to make somebody believe you are holy crusaders to save the Negro of the South. Why do you not clean up around your own doorsteps?

I realize that you northern Democrats, with your unholy alliance with the Republican Members, command enough votes to ram this bill through, but I warn you now that in so doing you are betraying the people who have kept your party alive and you are betraying the black man whom you profess to befriend. You should be here congratulating and commending the people of the South for what we have done and are doing instead of offering an insult through a bill of this kind.

This news item shows that in my own State of Georgia there was not a single lynching last year. Then why do you seek to force this bill upon my people? Our record is perfect. Do you think such a law as this, forced upon them, will help them keep that record clear? It will not, and one of my fears is that it will have the opposite effect. You just let the black rapist get the idea that the Federal Government is back of him and protecting and defending him and I am afraid it will bring about a condition that will be hard for us to handle.

I fear there is one thing some of you Members from other sections do not fully understand; that is, the determination of the white men of the South to protect the virtue and purity of their womenfolk. We intend to do that, come what may, and 10,000 laws or 10,000,000 bayonets will not stop us. I am just asking you today not to make it more difficult for us by passing a law of this kind and thereby lead those who would violate our homes to believe that you are protecting them and defending them in their lawlessness.

And why all this sympathy and concern over the victim of a lynching? In 99 cases out of 100, he has committed some heinous crime, a planned and deliberate act, not only against the laws of the land but in violation of the sanctity of the home and every sense of morals and decency. He deserves to be punished quickly, to the limit of the law, and, of course, according to law. But what about his poor, helpless, innocent victim, the one whose life has been wrecked or destroyed; in your eagerness to gain the good will and votes of your colored brethren cannot you spare just a little sympathy for the one who has done no wrong but whose life has been shattered or destroyed?

And why is it that you want to step in and tell us what we must do with reference to lynchings but have nothing in your bill to correct your own trouble? You have 40 or more gangster raids and killings to one lynching, but yet this bill contains not one word to provide special punishment or prevention of those crimes. Of course not. Those gangsters operate in your big cities of the North, and it would never do to be too strict with them; that would not get you any votes.

Is it any worse for a mob to lynch a man who has assaulted a helpless woman than it is for a gang to wipe out a man or group of men merely because he or they are interfering with the gang's business? Of course not. Then why are you protecting the gangster?

I have said that this bill is unreasonable and unconstitutional. Let us see if I am right about that. Paragraph 3 of this bill provides, in substance:

Any officer of a State, county, or city who possesses the authority or has custody of a person and fails to make all diligent efforts to prevent a lynching or to arrest and prosecute all members of the lynching mob, shall be guilty of a felony and shall be punished by a fine of $5,000 or imprisonment for 5 years, or both.

In the first place, there is no justification for this slanderous reflection upon the officers of the law and is not in keeping with the record which they have established. While there were three lynchings last year, the report shows that in 18 cases in the Southern States the officers of the law faced the danger of the loss of their own lives and prevented lynchings and mob violence. At no place in this Nation can you find county and city officers more devoted to their duty or more anxious to maintain and uphold the law than in my home State of Georgia.

This provision is clearly unconstitutional, because it is an effort by the Federal Government to come into my State and assume control of State officials and local law enforcement officers. In the case of Barbier v. Connolly (113 U. S. 27), the Supreme Court of the United States said:

Neither the fourteenth amendment nor any other amendment was designed to interfere with the police power of the State to regulate and promote the health, peace, morals, education, and good order of the people.

And in Keller v. United States (113 U. S. 138), the same Court said:

The power to establish ordinary police regulations has been left with the individual States and cannot be assumed by the National Government.

In the Cruikshank case (92 U. S. 542), the Court said:

The fourteenth amendment simply furnishes an additional guaranty against any encroachment by the State upon the fundamental rights which belong to every citizen as a member of society. The duty of protecting all of its citizens in the enjoyment of an equality of rights was originally assumed by the States, and it remains there.

In United States v. Harris (106 U. S. 638), the Supreme Court approved the Cruikshank case and said:

The fourteenth amendment is not a guaranty against the commission of individual offenses; and the power of Congress, whether expressed or implied, to legislate for the enforcement of such a guaranty does not extend to the passage of laws for the suppression of crime within the States.

And here is a United Press dispatch of last Friday, January 5, from Jackson, Miss.:

Sheriff O. J. Foxworth, of Marion County, today defied a lynch-threatening mob in order to bring a Negro suspected of murder to the mob-proof Hinds County jail for safekeeping.

Do you really believe that it would be helpful to Sheriff Foxworth and the thousands of other sheriffs in the South to pass this bill and subject them to the punishment of a fine of $5,000 and/or imprisonment for 5 years? Would it not be their natural reaction, with such punishment hanging over them, to let the culprit alone and never take custody of him, when knowing that if by chance a mob should take the culprit away from him he would be accorded such punishment?

But that is not the half of it.

Section 5 of this bill provides as follows:

The county or city in which a lynching occurs or in which a person is seized and later lynched elsewhere is made liable in damages up to $10,000 for the benefit of the family of the person lynched. Suit for such damages may be brought in the United States district courts and shall be filed by the Attorney General of the United States. Judgment for such damages may be enforced by mandamus. Prima facie evidence of liability is established by showing (1) that any officer of the city or county failed to provide protection for the person lynched; or (2) that rumors of possible mob violence were in general circulation in the community; or (3) any other circumstances existed which can justify the conclusion that the city or county failed to use all diligence possible to protect the person lynched.

What would that mean? Three or more persons could slip into my county in the dead of night, when every person in the county is asleep, seize a prisoner, and carry him away and lynch him, and then the innocent, law-abiding citizens of my county would be taxed to pay damages of $10,000.

Or a prisoner or culprit could be seized in some other county and brought across the line into my county in the dead of night and lynched, and there again the good people of my county could be made to pay damages up to $10,000.

Have you gone wild? Can this be an American Congress proposing a measure of this kind? But that is not all. Then you go ahead and set out how a prima facie case of liability against the county can be shown in the court. Did you notice how? By rumors or any other circumstances. Have we really come to that? Some of you have complained about lynchings on the ground that there is not always positive proof that the person lynched is the guilty party. But in the face of that complaint, you now come here and propose something just as bad or worse; that is, to lynch a county, to tax an innocent people, to assess damages on the basis of rumors or any other circumstances.

Can there be no limit to which you will go to satisfy the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People? This is the first bill I have ever seen which seeks in every possible way to protect the guilty and punish the innocent.

You Members from the North, the East, and the West, let me caution you to go slow. Are your communities so free of sin and crime that you can "cast the first stone"? You do not want the Federal Government going into your home town and telling you and your people what you can and cannot do, and I do not want them coming into my section either. My State and local authorities know how to handle this problem, and we are handling it. Just mind your own business and go home and clean up your own back yard and clear up your own black record of crime, filth, disloyalty, and disregard for the law.

Our record is clean. What about yours?

Do unto us just exactly like you would want us to do unto you. The day may come. [Applause.]

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Houston].

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, not being a self-appointed expert on constitutional law, I am willing to go along with this bill until such time as the courts say it is unconstitutional. Under the Constitution a man is not to be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law. He should be protected in their enjoyment.

Mr. Chairman, the need for a fair and just Federal anti-lynching law is apparent. "A man is innocent until proven guilty," and the provisions of the Constitution that no man shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law must be safeguarded. A Federal anti-lynching law should be enacted by this Congress so that order may be maintained in America and the blight of the crime known as lynching may be removed from the United States. Every time a victim perishes at the stake or by the rope the emancipation proclamation is suspended and civil equality is reduced to a political myth.

The bill now under consideration, H. R. 801, was carefully drafted and represents the best thought of many citizens as to what Congress may do to check lynching.

Under this bill the violence of three or more persons attempting to prevent the apprehension, trial, or punishment of any person, which results in his death or maiming, is deemed to be a lynching. A State or local officer failing through neglect to prevent a lynching, or to apprehend or prosecute any member of a lynching mob, is punishable by a $5,000 fine and/or 5 years' imprisonment. Any governmental subdivision failing through neglect to prevent a lynching, or a seizure and abduction followed elsewhere by a lynching, shall be liable for $2,000 to $10,000 in damages, recoverable in a civil action by the claimant or by the United States in his behalf.

Lynching is a flagrant violation of many constitutional rights. The victim is seized and held without legal warrant by a lawless mob. He is frequently taken from the custody of peace officers, with their active or passive sanction. All rights of fair hearing and trial are brutally and summarily denied. The victim is often transported from State to State. Usually by torture, which permits no alternative, he is driven in utter misery to meaningless self-indictment. And finally he is put to death, with young and old indiscriminately looking on or participating, under crime-breeding circumstances of indescribable savagery.

It is within our power to put a stop to this terrible foe of civilization, to eradicate this public enemy No. 1 of the United States and civilization, the lyncher. It is my honest belief that those whose hands are stained with the blood of one not proven guilty in a court of justice should be punished accordingly, should be charged with the murder they have committed, and should be punished to the full extent of the law. It is time that this most dastardly, most cowardly, and most repulsive form of crime be abolished. The time is ripe when we should turn upon the wrongdoers who are responsible for this premeditated form of murder and show these mobs, for once and for all, that we are not a race of savages who will tolerate the taking of a man's life without first granting him the trial that both God and man intended he should have.

"A man is innocent until proven guilty," and that guilt can be proven only in a court of law and not by a band of murderers who would defy all principles of rationalism and Americanism.

I am going to vote for this bill, believing it is necessary, and it is my sincere hope that when it is enacted into law it will never be applied. May all of our people come to a better understanding of the value of human rights. The passage of this bill will make people think and arrive at a different understanding which will forever blot out lynching. [Applause.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Corbett].

Mr. CORBETT. Mr. Chairman, the bill before us for consideration is more important because of its indirect effects than because of its direct effect. The direct effect of eliminating a few lynchings per year is not so vital except to the persons who are lynched and their friends and relatives. The indirect effect of having such a bill passed by the Congress of the United States is to raise 13,000,000 Negroes closer to the status of free and equal human beings enjoying the full protection of the United States Constitution.

Put bluntly the question before us today is, Should the United States Government extend its strong hand to protect its citizens from murderous mob action, or should it withhold its hand in order that those responsible for such mob action can continue to scoff at law, order, and civilized decency?

I hear objections raised to this antilynching bill on the grounds that it is unconstitutional, that it is a violation of State rights. No Member of this body is more of a constitutionalist than I am, but how, pray tell, can one call a bill unconstitutional which seeks to carry out the most fundamental duty of our Government as imposed by the Constitution itself? The Constitution, Mr. Chairman, insists that the life of every American citizen shall be protected by our Government; that we shall all, white and colored, enjoy the equal protection of the law and the strength of the Government. What does this bill aim to do except to force subdivisions of our Federal Government to extend that protection to those who have been singled out for a horrible death without even an opportunity to be heard in court?

Mr. Chairman, there is no point in arguing that this bill is bad because the crimes resulting in lynchings are bad. If the States where lynchings have been common will look to their law-enforcement agencies, they can see to it that speedy justice is done. This bill demands speedy justice in a legitimate trial court, as opposed to speedy action by mobs.

More important, however, as I stated at the outset, is the effect that the passage of this bill will have on the Negroes themselves. Let us remember that the American Negro has made more progress in the ways of civilization than any other race ever did in a similar period of time. There is no field of American science or culture to which the Negro has not made valuable contributions. I submit that the great George Washington Carver, working in his quiet laboratory, has done more for American agriculture than all of the New Deal experiments combined.

It is my sincere belief that by the passage of this bill we will do much to improve the spirit and the self-confidence of our colored brothers. We will by the dignity of an act of Congress serve notice that in these United States a colored man has every right to a fair trial that is accorded to a white man.

True, much will remain to be done economically, socially, and politically for the betterment of the Negro, but at least we will have taken one more step in the proper direction. I am not among those who feel myself to be better than any other man, and I do not feel entitled to any benefits under the law which are not accorded to everyone.

Therefore, since I believe that the passage of the Gavagan antilynching bill will do much to prevent the disgrace and tragedy of lynching, and since I believe its passage will be a great moral stimulant to the Negro race, I have lent my efforts and will give my vote to its final passage. [Applause.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLEOD] such time as he may desire.

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to go on record at this time as favoring the passage of the Gavagan bill.

We have before us today a proposal that should receive the applause of every law-abiding citizen in the United States—a proposal to compel by Federal law every peace officer to do his duty as he has sworn to do—a proposal to stamp out lynch-crazed mobs and to restore law and order.

In this country of ours a man is presumed to be innocent until tried and convicted by a jury of his peers. But what a mockery it is when some helpless white man or Negro is seized from lax law-enforcement officers by frenzied crowds and hanged to the nearest tree.

Most lynchings that have occurred in the past could have been prevented had officers protected their prisoners as they are sworn to do. I once heard a story of a western sheriff in the days of the old West who said he could pick the ring-leader of a mob by the look in his eyes and that once you concentrated on the leader the mob was licked. I do not know how sound that philosophy is, but that particular sheriff never lost a prisoner.

In nearly every case of lynching the person lynched is a Negro, and I submit, gentlemen, that Negroes are entitled to the same rights under the Constitution as persons of the white race.

The American Negroes' progress has been nothing short of amazing. First of all, he has proven himself a good citizen—ambitious, honest, unassuming. He has contributed to science, education, and industry. We have only to point to that universally acclaimed Dr. George Washington Carver, who from the lowly peanut has given so much to science, as a point in illustration. Booker T. Washington was another outstanding example of his race, and I could name many others.

It is the Negro in the main that this proposed legislation seeks to protect. Some of my friends in this body say that it is too drastic, but, gentlemen, mob violence should be treated drastically; and as long as the States have been unable to wipe out lynching, it becomes the obligation of the Federal Government to step in by law and by the best methods at its command to stop this unjustified blood letting, which at one time or another has smeared the record of many States in the Union. Thus, our duty, as legislators, is clear. From the Mount of Sinai comes the commandment, "Thou shalt not kill." [Applause.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, may I ask how the time stands?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. GAVAGAN] has 33 minutes remaining. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] has 49 minutes remaining. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] has 22 minutes remaining.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Chairman, in saying that the pending antilynching bill is unconstitutional, that term is not used in a legalistic sense. It is meant that the provisions of the bill are contrary to those great fundamental principles that make the Constitution itself wise. It is meant that the proposal is contrary to the very conception upon which the American Government is founded.

Since the beginning our courts have held that the plain language of the amendment—

Nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the law—

Is nothing more than a prohibition against State action. This language was so well analyzed in 1883 in the Civil Rights Cases (109 U. S. 3) and that decision has been so uniformly followed and confirmed as to render the following quotation therefrom appropriate:

It is State action of a particular character that is prohibited. Individual invasion of individual rights is not the subject matter of the amendment. It has a deeper and broader scope. It nullifies and makes void all State legislation and State action of every kind which impairs the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States, or which injures them in life, liberty, or property without due process of law, or which denies to any of them the equal protection of the laws. It not only does this, but, in order that the national will, thus declared, may not be a mere brutum fulmen, the last section of the amendment invests Congress with power to enforce it by appropriate legislation. To enforce what? To enforce the prohibition. To adopt appropriate legislation for correcting the effects of such prohibited State laws and State acts, and thus to render them effectually null, void, and innocuous. This is the legislative power conferred upon Congress, and this is the whole of it. It does not invest Congress with power to legislate upon subjects which are within the domain of State legislation but to provide modes of relief against State legislation, or State action, of the kind referred to. It does not authorize Congress to create a code of municipal law for the regulation of private rights but to provide modes of redress against the operation of State laws and the action of State officers, executive or judicial, when these are subversive of the fundamental rights specified in the amendment.

Positive rights and privileges are undoubtedly secured by the fourteenth amendment, but they are secured by way of prohibition against State laws and State proceedings affecting those rights and privileges, and by power given to Congress to legislate for the purpose of carrying such prohibition into effect; and such legislation must necessarily be predicated upon such supposed State laws or State proceedings and be directed to the correction of their operation and effect.

And again, the same decision:

And so in the present case, until some State law has been passed, or some State action through its officers or agents has been taken adverse to the rights of citizens sought to be protected by the fourteenth amendment, no legislation of the United States under said amendment, nor any proceeding under such legislation, can be called into activity, for the prohibitions of the amendment are against State laws and acts done under State authority.

And again in the same opinion:

The truth is that the implication of a power to legislate in this manner is based upon the assumption that if the States are forbidden to legislate or act in a particular way on a particular subject, and power is conferred upon Congress to enforce the prohibition, this gives Congress power to legislate generally upon that subject, and not merely power to provide modes of redress against such State legislation or action. The assumption is certainly unsound. It is repugnant to the tenth amendment of the Constitution, which declares that powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States, respectively, or to the people.

And again in the same opinion:

In this connection it is proper to state that civil rights, such as are guaranteed by the Constitution against State aggression, cannot be impaired by the wrongful acts of individuals, unsupported by State authority in the shape of laws, customs, or judicial or executive proceedings. The wrongful act of an individual, unsupported by any such authority, is simply a private wrong, or a crime of that individual; an invasion of the rights of the injured party, it is true, whether they affect his person, his property, or his reputation; but if not sanctioned in some way by the State, or not done under State authority, his rights remain in full force and may presumably be vindicated by resort to the laws of the State for redress. An individual cannot deprive a man of his right to vote, to hold property, to buy and sell, to sue in the courts, or to be a witness or a juror; he may, by force or fraud, interfere with the enjoyment of the right in a particular case; he may commit an assault against the person, or commit murder, or use ruffian violence at the polls, or slander the good name of a fellow citizen; but, unless protected in these wrongful acts by some shield of State law or State authority, he cannot destroy or injure the right; he will only render himself amenable to satisfaction or punishment, and amenable therefore to the laws of the State where the wrongful acts are committed. Hence, in all those cases where the Constitution seeks to protect the rights of the citizen against discriminative and unjust laws of the State by prohibiting such laws, it is not individual offenses, but abrogation and denial of rights, which it denounces, and for which it clothes the Congress with power to provide a remedy. This abrogation and denial of rights, for which the States alone were or could be responsible, was the great seminal and fundamental wrong which was intended to be remedied. And the remedy to be provided must necessarily be predicated upon that wrong. It must assume that in the cases provided for the evil or wrong actually committed rests upon some State law or State authority for its excuse and perpetration.

The bill under consideration runs counter to the foregoing principle, because it undertakes plainly to operate upon certain individuals within the States. It undertakes to make peace officers guilty of a felony for neglect of duty. It would subject them to heavy fines and imprisonment for failing to exercise all due diligence and power. Such failure of an officer in the discharge of duty certainly could not be considered State action in any respect. Indeed, every State and every subdivision thereof requires of its peace officers the diligent discharge of duty. If an individual suffers injury because of the failure of a peace officer in the discharge of duty, that is in the nature of a private injury, wholly unauthorized by the State.

Reference has been made in the course of the argument to Virginia v. Rives (100 U. S. 313) and Ex parte Virginia (100 U. S. 339), where some expressions are used to the effect that the State must proceed through its officers, and hence their acts might constitute in a way State action. But, necessarily, this could only mean acts authorized in some way by the State, or at least condoned and approved by it as a State. In Barney v. City of New York (193 U. S. 438), decided in 1903, the court refers both to Virginia against Rives and Civil Rights Cases, supra, reaffirms the principles announced in the latter, and speaking more specifically as to what acts of subordinate officers may constitute State action says:

If, as in this case, the subordinate officer whose duty it is to select jurors fails to discharge that duty in the true spirit of the law; if he excludes all colored men solely because they are colored; or if the sheriff to whom a venire is given, composed of both white and colored citizens, neglects to summon the colored jurors only because they are colored; or if a clerk whose duty it is to take the 12 names from the box rejects all the colored jurors for the same reason, it can with no propriety be said that the defendant's right is denied by the State and cannot be enforced in the judicial tribunals.

I shall not burden the record with citation of the countless cases uniformly adhering to the principle of law invoked, but attention is called to the fact that Civil Rights Cases were cited with approval in 1914 in Frank v. Mangum (237 U. S. 328), and in 1925 in Corrigan v. Buckley (271 U. S. 330), where the Court said:

And the prohibitions of the fourteenth amendment "have reference to State action exclusively and not to any action of private individuals" (Virginia v. Rives, 100 U. S. 313; United States v. Harris, 106 U. S. 623). "It is State action of a particular character that is prohibited. Individual invasion of individual rights is not the subject of the amendment" (Civil Rights Cases, 109 U. S.).

Neglect in the discharge of duty is but an ultra vires act of the peace officer resulting in a private injury, redress of which rests under the law and in the courts of the State. If Congress has the right to deal with a peace officer for neglect of duty in permitting a prisoner to be taken from his custody, it has the same right to deal with his excessive use of force in making an arrest, or any unlawful abuse of process. Thus it could invade the entire field and deprive the States entirely of the right and power to establish and maintain law and order within its boundaries, which is the primary prerequisite of sovereignty.

ANOTHER PROVISION OF THE BILL

I shall discuss but briefly that provision of the bill undertaking to give every injured person a cause of action against subdivisions of the State and undertaking to fix a penalty against them of from $2,000 to $10,000 to the use of every person injured. Attention is called to the fact that the United States Government is immune from suits on account of the torts of its officers and its agents. This is because of its sovereignty, and the same is true as to States and counties generally. By what stretch of the imagination has Congress any constitutional authority to waive the sovereignty of the State and its subdivisions and render them liable in the Federal courts to unlimited damages and penalties because of the neglect of duty, or tort, of some peace officer? The proposal is absurd.

IN NORTH CAROLINA

I presume that every State has laws against the abhorrent and always unjustifiable crime of lynching. Our own State of North Carolina has many well-considered statutes upon the subject, making it the duty of the solicitors of the several judicial districts promptly to investigate every such crime, providing that the expenses thereof shall be borne by the county in which the offense is committed, including a special fee to the solicitor for such investigation, taking away from witnesses any right to decline to answer because of self-incrimination, giving the courts of all adjoining counties concurrent jurisdiction and requiring the solicitor to file a report with the grand jury of each, making any witness who refuses to appear and testify guilty of a misdemeanor, with other provisions which it is not necessary for me to mention here, but which make plain the duties of all the officers of the State both in the prevention of this particular crime, its full and prompt investigation and the punishment of the offenders. These are laws of the State. They apply to all of its citizens alike. They do not deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, or the equal protection of the law. On the contrary, they aim to protect and safeguard life and liberty and to afford equal protection to every citizen of the State. Yet this bill would have Congress say that no matter how many laws the State of North Carolina may have for the protection of its citizenship against the crime of lynching, or how wise those laws may be, or what vigorous efforts it may make to enforce them, and no matter how impossible it might be for the State to do so, if it fails to prevent a lynching and punish the offenders, it shall be deemed to have denied due process of law and the equal protection of the law to the unfortunate victim.

These laws have not been a dead letter in North Carolina. I recall an instance fully 30 years ago when two mature Negroes committed a crime so dastardly as to infuriate and enrage the entire county. A mob quickly formed, bent upon their summary punishment. The sheriff of that county happened to be one who had served with distinction in the Confederate Army. His own natural instincts were necessarily as much outraged as those of his neighbors, but he realized that law and order must be maintained. Having managed to capture the Negroes but a short distance from the point at which the mob had formed, he started for the county seat with the mob in hot pursuit. Realizing that it would be difficult to protect his prisoners in the small county-seat town, on reaching that point he, without hesitation, commandeered a steamboat that happened to be in a nearby river, and, with his prisoners aboard, gave orders that the boat should proceed with all speed and without stopping at the behest of anyone until it reached a city some 60 miles distant. In that city, he kept his prisoners overnight, and having received instructions to take them to the State prison for safekeeping, he undertook on the following morning to do so. After he had reached the railway station and gotten his prisoners aboard a car, a mob that had formed clandestinely quickly surrounded the car, cut it loose from the train to which it was attached, and undertook to take possession of the prisoners. This courageous officer put his prisoners under one of the seats in the coach, and standing over them with a pistol in each hand, he fired without hesitation at every man who attempted to enter. With the aid of only one or two deputies, he stood that mob off until a local company of militia arrived. He took his prisoners to the State prison, and in due course he brought them back to his own county where they were given an orderly trial and paid the penalty for their horrible crime.

Or reference might be made to the case of State v. Caldwell (181 N. C. 519), where is told the heroic action of a superior court judge in vindicating the supremacy of the law. The prisoners in this case were in the State prison for safekeeping and were to be brought for trial to Goldsboro, N. C. Learning that an effort would be made to take the prisoners from the custody of the law, the Honorable W. A. Devin, now a distinguished member of the Supreme Court of North Carolina, called together many of the good citizens of the community, explained the situation, and expressed his desire to proceed in the administration of justice, provided he might have their support. This was gladly given, a sufficient number of them were deputized, the prisoners were taken to the third floor of the county courthouse, the stairways were barricaded, and although a mob did attack during the night and undertook to get possession of the prisoners, it was successfully frustrated by the citizenship of that community under the leadership of this distinguished jurist and the local officers. The trial later proceeded in an orderly manner and the law was vindicated.

Or reference might be made to that time in September 1917 when the Honorable Thomas W. Bickett, Governor of North Carolina, was called late at night and informed that a mob was gathering at the jail of that county located about 1 mile from the Governor's mansion. This was a furious mob. In their midst a crime had been committed under circumstances and of a nature so horrible as to outrage the sensibilities of all right-thinking men. Taking only time to slip his clothes over his pajamas, Governor Bickett hurried to the scene, where he was promptly challenged and halted by the mob. But after he had managed to say to them, "I am not afraid of you; are you afraid of me," he was permitted to speak. "I appeal," he said, "to your own manhood, to your courage, to your sense of justice to disburse and go back to your own wives and mothers and refrain from doing a deed that you will regret all the days of your life and that will bring shame and disgrace to the whole State." His appeal was not in vain. Again the law was vindicated.

Similar instances could be detailed by the hundreds, but I shall not so encumber the RECORD. The action of these men and that of countless other hundreds is something that cannot be bought for a price. They acted through no fear of the strong arm of the Federal Government but from the highest motives of patriotism, and with them must ever rest the greatest security for the uniform and impartial enforcement of the law.

It is my conviction that the way to eliminate lynching is to eliminate those brutish instincts which ever and anon break over and infuriate good men almost beyond the point of reason, often bringing disgrace to both races. This is being accomplished by enlightenment and education, and it is my own hope and belief that it will continue to be to an ever-increasing extent. In this connection I wish to refer to what the State of North Carolina is doing for Negro education. I am aware of the fact that the appropriations may not be as large as in some of the richer States, but they do show striking progress. [Applause.]

SOME FACTS ABOUT NEGRO EDUCATION IN NORTH CAROLINA

1. State support for elementary and high-school education

The State of North Carolina expended for instructional service in the Negro schools during the year 1933-34, $2,751,-387.76, and during the year 1937-38 the amount was increased to $4,737,188.32. During the school year 1938-39 for instructional purposes in the Negro schools the State spent $4,939,-269.47. This amount will be increased about 2 percent for the school year 1939-40. A special allocation of $117,000 was made by the State school commission in order to reduce the differential between white and Negro salary schedules for teachers.

2. Value of school property

The value of Negro school property expanded from $11,475,-042 in 1929-30 to $13,887,392 in 1937-38. During the 5-year period 1933-38, $3,684,537 was spent for the construction and improvement of schoolhouses for Negro children. During the school year 1938-39, $1,250,452 was spent for the construction and improvement of schoolhouses for Negro children. The average value per child enrolled increased from $44.20 in 1929-30 to $51.76 in 1937-38.

3. Enrollment in elementary and high schools

(a) Elementary schools: The enrollment in the Negro elementary schools increased from 259,595 in 1929-30 to 268,287 in 1937-38. The percentage of enrollment in average daily attendance for the same period improved from 71.7 percent to 83.2 percent; the number of elementary schools having 7 or more teachers increased from 36 to 152, and the average term in days increased from 141 to 163.4.

(b) Public high schools: The number of public high schools for Negro children increased from 119 in 1929-30 to 203 in 1937-38. The number of public accredited high schools for the same group increased from 66 in 1929-30 to 158 in 1938-39. The enrollment in these public high schools increased from 15,182 in 1929-30 to 33,050 in 1937-38. During the same period the number of graduates increased from 1,687 to 4,112 and the number of libraries in both elementary and high schools increased from 441 to 831.

4. Transportation

The number of vehicles used for transporting Negro children to and from school increased from 103 in 1929-30 to 436 in 1937-38. For the same years the number of schools served by these busses increased from 94 to 250 and the number of children transported increased from 3,746 to 24,604. During the school year 1938-39 the State spent for transportation in Negro schools $165,443.87. This does not include the amount spent from local budgets and private contributions for the purchase of equipment for new bus routes.

5. Improvement in results

The percentage of children enrolled in the first three grades for the 10-year period, 1926-27 to 1936-37 decreased from 63 percent to 52 percent; the percentage of enrollment in grades 4 to 7 increased from 33 percent to 36 percent, and the percentage of enrollment in the high schools increased from 4 percent to 12 percent. During the same decade the percentage of children promoted in the elementary schools increased from 43.8 percent to 65.5 percent, and in the high schools the percentage of children promoted increased from 45 to 66.5 percent.

6. Teachers

The number of teachers employed in the Negro elementary and high schools increased from 5,959 in 1927-28 to 7,113 in 1938-39. During this same period the average scholarship of the Negro teachers employed in the public schools of this State increased from about two-thirds of 1 year of college training to 3 1/3 years of college training.

7. Colleges

The State of North Carolina maintains five colleges for Negro youth. Each of these institutions is a 4-year standard college. For the year 1939-40 the appropriation for the maintenance of these schools is $211,642. The enrollment in all the Negro colleges in the State of North Carolina, public and private, has shown the following growth in enrollment:

1924-25.....	723
1929-30.....	2,655
1939-40.....	4,831

8. Graduate instruction

For the year 1939-40, by special enactment, provision was made for graduate instruction to be given at the Agricultural and Technical College and the North Carolina College for Negroes. A total of $81,181 was provided for intrastate instruction in these institutions. A special fund of $6,000 was allotted for scholarship grants through the North Carolina College for Negroes to those individuals desiring graduate instruction outside the scope of the offerings of this institution. Up to date 49 scholarship grants have been provided through this fund.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BRYSON].

Mr. BRYSON. Mr. Chairman, I realize that we are much pressed for time. Although I had desired to speak publicly on the pending bill, I have reduced my views in the matter briefly to writing, and I now ask for the privilege of inserting them in the RECORD at this point.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BRYSON. Mr. Chairman, any measure which is unnecessary need not be passed; any measure which is dangerous must not be passed. I rise this morning to speak against a measure which is both unnecessary and dangerous, a bill which need not and must not be passed.

I describe the pending bill, H. R. 801, as unnecessary because our State authorities are now dealing with the problem of lynching in a satisfactory, highly successful manner. In fact, so much progress has been made along these lines that between the years 1922 and 1939 the number of lynchings in the United States decreased from a total of 57 to a total of 3.

It is mainly by education that you effectively deal with the problem of lynching, and not by the placing on our Federal statute books of cumbersome acts. It would be unwise, extremely so, with the number of lynchings rapidly declining through education and the enforcement of State laws, to interrupt this progress by enacting legislation which will serve to insult the good people of the South. You may be sure about this: Any bill designed to curb the fundamental rights of our State governments will be strongly resented by the people of the South, just as it should be strongly resented by the people of every other part of the Nation.

But not only is the proposed legislation unnecessary—it is dangerous, as I have already begun to indicate. The bill before us has been referred to in the press and on the floor of the House as an antilynch bill. Well, those who wish may continue to call it an antilynch bill—the intent and purpose of this bill may be antilynch, but if enacted its effect will be otherwise. Gentlemen, you are not considering here a bill against lynching; you are considering one for it. You are not considering a measure which will reduce lynchings; you are considering a measure which will increase them.

No one disputes the fact that this bill is aimed against the South, so let us examine the situation there and see if this legislation is justified. A minute ago when I said the bill was dangerous I meant particularly that it would menace the welfare of the South where the Negro population is largest. Why? Chiefly because the adoption of any measure such as the pending one, which throws a morbid appeal to race passions and prejudices, is certain to shatter racial relations.

The race issue in the South has been virtually settled. Pass this bill, and you will at once have started the whole painful process all over again. Little more than a half a century has elapsed since the South emerged from the days of carpet-bag rule. Those were the days when southern womanhood was assaulted, southern property pillaged, southern rights trampled. Read Claud Bower's The Tragic Era, read Pike's The Prostrate State, and then consider the remarkable fashion in which the men and women of the South rose to restore law and order.

We have law and order in the South today—practically no racial problem there. But if this bill passes, creating anew a racial problem for the South, the people of the South will rise to meet the menace. The attendant evils of carpetbag rule will never be reestablished in the South.

Finally, if the real purpose of this bill, as it has been claimed, is to curry the favor of Negro voters in the North, it is certainly a sad commentary of some of the present-day political strategy. What a snare and a delusion: This bill supposedly designed to solve a problem which hardly exists and sure to arouse feelings which are now amiable.

In conclusion, I say reject this bill, which is both unnecessary and dangerous—a bill which need not and must not be enacted. [Applause.]

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURDICK].

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Chairman, if I believed that the Representative from Illinois represented the Negro people of America I would vote against this bill. I am a Republican and always have been. I know of no State in the North that excludes the Negro from any legitimate activity. I know of no place in the North where the Negro cannot vote. When I am told that the Republicans are voting for this bill to bring the Negro vote back into the Republican Party I am inclined to vote no.

But I do not believe that the gentleman from Illinois represents the Negro race in this country, and for that reason, Mr. Chairman, I am going to reserve my vote on this bill until the actual time of voting.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield.

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not purport to represent the colored people of America. I came here to represent the people of the First Congressional District of Illinois, just as the gentleman from North Dakota came here to represent the people of his district.

Mr. BURDICK. Why does the gentleman say that I am a Republican trying to induce the Negro votes to come back to the Republican Party?

Mr. MITCHELL. Because it is true.

Mr. BURDICK. We have only 200 Negro voters in the State of North Dakota.

Mr. MITCHELL. I say it because it is true.

Mr. BURDICK. If the gentleman pretends to represent the Negro race and does not want our vote we will not give it, if that is what the gentleman wants.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is the gentleman's high privilege.

Mr. BURDICK. I am willing to sacrifice the constitutional opinions I have in this matter for the purpose of bringing to the attention of the American people the evils of lynching, but I do not like to be insulted in the bargain.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield.

Mr. FISH. I am ready to yield the gentleman additional time, so he will have plenty of time, but I want to appeal to the gentleman before he finishes that he not be driven to vote against this by any speech made by a colored man from Chicago. I ask him to vote his convictions for the bill.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota.

Mr. BURDICK. I know in the great Middle West where I come from we make no distinctions as to the color of anyone, and I do not know of any place in the West where a colored man cannot vote. We have not been in the business of going out and inducing Indians, or Negroes, or whites, to join the Republican Party. We have certain views that we want to carry out—at least I have—in my section of the country, and I am not compromising on racial matters at all.

I do not know what you call it down here, down South—that is where we are now, pretty close to it—but up in the North we would call it an insult for a man to get up here and say that the Republican Party is favoring this bill because they want to induce the Negro votes to come back to it. I resent it.

If a Negro cannot vote in some States, they are States with which I am not familiar. In all of the Western States I have ever been in the Negro votes the same as anybody else.

The gentleman from Illinois says he knows where his friends are, and he also says that the Negroes cannot vote in certain States where his friends are. If this is the attitude of the Representative of the Negro race, it is mighty difficult for the Republicans to overlook that matter and vote for this great principle. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES].

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this bill for a number of reasons. First, I think it is unconstitutional; second, I think it places a premium upon lawlessness; and, third, I think the passage of this bill is an insult to the intelligence of the people of this Nation as a whole, because I know of no section of the country which upholds lynching or crime in any form, shape, or fashion. I know of no section of the country which has made more rapid progress in the stamping out of a recognized evil and a form of lawlessness than has the South in stamping out of so-called lynching parties.

There have been three alleged offenses during the past year. It is doubtful whether either of them could properly be classed as a lynching under the terms of the present bill. I know of no record of which America has more reason to be proud than the record that public opinion and local officials have made in connection with the eradication of this form of lawlessness. I only wish that the Members of Congress from the North, East, South, and West would use the same good judgment and the same regard for the processes of the law and of our National Constitution as the people of this country have shown in their effort to build up public opinion against this crime and bringing about its eradication.

Mr. Chairman, I was particularly interested today in the remarks of the distinguished statesman from New York, and for fear that a question may arise as to whom I refer, I refer to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], in his most eloquent and convincing address against this bill. I was further impressed by the remarks of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS], who has one of the finest and keenest legal minds that ever functioned within the sacred precincts of this Chamber. Those men presented arguments to you and to me that were unanswerable insofar as the Constitution, law, logic, sound common sense, and patriotism are concerned.

I do not question the motives of anyone. I do not question the motives of the proponents of this bill. But I do question the soundness of the principles of this bill and I regret the feeling that has been exhibited by some of the proponents of this bill and the aspersions which have been cast upon certain sections of this country. I say that the processes of democracy will not be served by the passage of this bill. Every Member of this House knows, regardless of his politics, race, creed, or color that the bill will not be passed upon favorably by the Senate of the United States. There are so many problems of pressing import that deserve attention on your part and mine we could better spend our time upon that I think it is a shame and a travesty the Members of the House should be devoting time to a discussion of this useless measure. I feel that we should not foster divisions within the party, within segments of our society, and between races in this country by the promulgation of such legislation in this critical hour. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER].

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, I addressed this body earlier in the day and certainly did not emphasize partisanship. I merely pointed to the fact that our party had this issue in its platform. I heard the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MITCHELL] address the House, and during the early part of his remarks he made a very fine presentation. Then he ruined all the good he had accomplished by making the kind of attack he did. During the constructive part of his speech I noticed that his colleagues were eloquently silent. When he made an attack on this side of the House, it was received with great glee.

If any person has made an effective speech against this bill today, it is the Congressman from Illinois [Mr. MITCHELL]. He certainly made as effective a speech against this bill as I have heard on the floor of the House. May I say that I do not believe he represents the colored people of this country at all. I believe he represents his party in Chicago, and in the latter part of his speech he did all in his power to break down the support that this measure has had.

The Republicans of this Nation need make no apology to any group. We Republicans have always stood for the principle that Abraham Lincoln established—that is, to make men free. In Ohio we Republicans have been electing Negroes to public office for many decades. In the city of Cleveland we have three members on the city council. The chairman of our civil service commission in Cleveland is a Negro. In fact, in most of the front offices in the city hall will be found members of the colored race. I resent very deeply the implication in his statement that the Republicans are in some way attempting to get back the vote of the colored people. We do not have to go after that vote. In Ohio the great majority of our Negro population is Republican.

Mr. MITCHELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MITCHELL. Did you have the vote in 1936?

Mr. BENDER. I would like to arrange a time when you and I can debate that, and I will tell you all about 1936.

Mr. MITCHELL. The gentleman could answer that question.

Mr. BENDER. And about 1932, too. I cannot understand the agility of a mind that on the one hand puts out $100 dinners and fraternizes with the Dukes, the Biddles, the Du Ponts and all the other high moguls of finance and on the other hand pretends in a sectional way to be a member of a party ready to help the under dog and the underprivileged. The whole thing seems dizzy to me. Roosevelt talked about constitutionality. He said that emphasis should not be placed on constitutionality. Today we hear emphasis being placed on constitutionality. You hear all phases of the argument and you cannot keep up with it. On one day they make an argument one way and on the next day they give you a different one. It takes more than a Philadelphia lawyer to keep tab of this New Deal crowd. In the cities they make an appeal on the basis of helping the colored man. They want him to forget about the way they have treated him elsewhere. The new dealers' conduct passeth all understanding. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KITCHENS. Mr. Chairman, the bill under consideration is paraded before the Congress biennially—every congressional-election year. It is clearly unconstitutional in that it violates the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution, and attempts to federally usurp powers reserved by the people to themselves and their States. The title of the bill purports "to assure to persons within the jurisdiction of every State due process of law and equal protection of the law, and prevent the crime of lynching." It might as well go further and prevent homicide, robbery, embezzlement, fornication, or rape, and give Federal protection to these victims.

Lynching is a violation of the law of every State in the Union. The fourteenth amendment merely guarantees that each State shall give every person within its jurisdiction equal protection of the law and due process of law. If this bill be constitutional, then a bill "to assure to persons within the jurisdiction of every State due process of law and equal protection of the law, and to prevent the crime of robbery, grand larceny, homicide, rape, or any other crime" would be constitutional. Does a man who is robbed, has his property stolen from him, or is assassinated have the equal protection of the law? Does a woman who is ravished have the equal protection of the law? Does either of them have due process of law? The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CREAL] argues that a man has a right to be confronted by his accuser, to have an attorney, and his witnesses brought into court, and a jury trial. How about the man who is assassinated because of being suspected of or charged with a crime, or charged with no crime at all? He is given no such privilege. A citizen may be robbed and another citizen not be robbed. Is the citizen robbed given equal protection of the law? Has his property been taken from him under due process of law, or by a jury? Yet the proponents of this bill say that each and all are entitled to equal protection of the law, and for that reason and pretext would have the Federal Government assume control and jurisdiction for all crimes committed in the United States. That means destruction of all local self-government. That means the centralization of all power at the Federal Capital. That means the foundation for a dictatorship. That means revolution.

Mr. Chairman, the experiences of mankind, of every country in the world, show us that education and an intelligent public opinion constitute barriers against crime. We have today the fact of only three lynchings out of 130,000,000 people during the year 1939, a gradual reduction of this horrible crime, which is most gratifying to all of us, while more than 12,000 other homicides were committed during the same year.

Will this bill give protection to the man who is murdered in cold blood or the woman ravished by one or two men? Will this bill give financial reward to the heirs of such a man who has lost his life? Are the heirs of such a man given equal protection of the law in this bill, financial or otherwise, with the heirs of a man who has committed the dastardly crime of rape? Certainly not. Yet the proponents of this bill propose to reward financially the heirs of a rapist at the expense of innocent people, and yet give no reward to the woman raped or innocent heirs of an innocent relative murdered in cold blood. Does this bill give any protection whatever to the heirs of the victim of a gang or gangsters so prevalent at times in some of our large cities? Not at all. Where is your process of law or equal protection for the victim of gangsters? This bill intentionally discriminates against him in violation of the fourteenth amendment, if your interpretation be correct.

I abhor lynching and crime of any kind. I believe in the due process of law and in the equal protection and interpretation of the law to all races and creeds, but this bill does not and cannot give equal protection, nor can it be honestly contended that it gives equal protection, and is merely a gesture for political purposes. There is no sincerity in this bill, and the colored people of this country should not be deceived.

A few years ago a sheriff in my county, a fine man, was shot down in cold blood from ambush while investigating the commission of a crime. The murderer of that sheriff was lynched. Under the present bill the heirs of that murderer would be rewarded at the expense of innocent people, while the widow of the innocent sheriff has to go through life without any protection or assistance whatsoever. Even the Federal Government would bear all the expense of collection of the reward for the benefit of the murderer's heirs.

We have on the floor of the House an able representative of the colored race. I refer to Hon. ARTHUR MITCHELL, of Chicago. He has at all times demeaned himself as a gentleman and has the respect of every Member of Congress. The bill he introduced was sidetracked by those wishing to arrogate to themselves the political privilege and advantage of claiming and showing their interest in his race. His bill should have been considered by this House, and not the bill before us. But who sidetracked the bill he introduced? Was it the real friend or friends of his race? He is wise and intelligent enough and stated on the floor of the House that the colored man today will not continue to be deceived all of his life. He is not only intelligent but capable and an energetic representative of his people and will not be deluded or deceived. He knows that those who profess to be the friends of his people turned them loose without aid or help of any kind and permitted them to struggle along and alone for nearly three-fourths of a century. He knows that the predecessors of those today who proclaim their great interest in his race, rendered only lip service and used his people merely as chattels for political purposes and power.

He knows that for several years after the Civil War, and particularly in the seventies and eighties of the last century, the predecessors of those who now proclaim from the house-tops of their love and interest in his race called members of his race "brother" and "brothers" without sincerity. He knows that the predecessors of those same people in this Congress opposed the lending of any assistance towards the education of his race or to assist them financially in any way whatsoever. He knows that when Senator Blair, of New Hampshire, along about 1885, introduced a bill in the Senate of the United States to appropriate funds for the welfare and education of the colored race, that the political associates of Senator Blair opposed the bill and called him a sentimentalist, but admitted it was a good gesture.

Mr. Chairman, if we can pass this bill providing that if three people cooperating together shoot or hang another, and it is lynching, then the Congress can provide that where two cooperating together, or where one without cooperation shoots or kills another, that the Federal Government will assume jurisdiction; not only that, but it can place the Federal courts in charge of all such offenses, then the Congress may go one, two, or three steps further, and place the commission or attempted commission of all crimes under the jurisdiction of Federal courts for the reason that anyone against whom an offense has been committed has not received the equal protection of the law, or due process of law. Therefore, it is plain that this bill is a political one, and a mere political gesture, a contradiction in terms. If it should pass and become a law of this Nation, then the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution will be distorted from its purpose, and will become the vehicle of its own destruction through misinterpretation, and this bill would be a futility in any case.

As I look at the faces of some of those, so actively favoring this bill, I cannot fail to reach the conclusion that they really do not want this bill to become a law. The passage of this bill into law would probably end the further necessity of their services in Congress as there would be nothing left at which to direct their efforts.

I am reminded of a story that was told of an old lawyer in a certain town of New York, the State of two of those who modestly admit to being leaders in behalf of this bill. That old lawyer had been an attorney representing an estate for a great many years. In the meantime, his son grew to manhood and became a lawyer. One day the lawyer told his son he was having to leave for 2 or 3 days, and he wished him to look after that estate case if it should come up for hearing during his absence. In a few days the father returned and said to his son, "Did you look after that estate matter?" His son replied, "Yes, father; I got the case settled." The father retorted, "Oh, my God, you have spoiled everything. We have been living all these years from that case, and now you have gotten it settled, and we are ruined."

Mr. Chairman, I can find no excuse for such a bill as this before the Congress, other than a political one. The bill is so worded that no conviction ever could be obtained under it if the bill were constitutional.

The Washington Post on yesterday had an editorial expressing fully some of my sentiments about this bill, and I quote same as a part of my remarks:

[From the Washington Post]
ANTILYNCHING POLITICS

Politics inevitably intrudes into a congressional session preceding a general election. Every action that is taken is likely to be considered from the viewpoint of its political effect. But that does not justify the injection of mere time wasting political gestures into a session that is confronted by more urgent legislation than it can hope to enact.

The antilynching bill taken up by the House yesterday must be placed in this category. It has previously passed the House only to be killed by filibuster in the Senate. There can scarcely be any doubt that the bill would encounter a similar fate if it should be passed by the House and again submitted to the Senate for debate. To avoid another filibuster and serious disruption of their legislative program Senate leaders would probably pigeonhole the bill.

There is no reason, moreover, for pressing the bill at this time. A few years ago, when the barbarous practice of lynching persons suspected of crime was common in the South, a plausible case could be made for some sort of Federal interference. Now lynching has virtually disappeared. Every State, except Mississippi and Florida, had a clear record in 1939 so far as this dastardly crime is concerned. And in those two States only three lynchings were reported.

With the problem thus narrowed to two States, there is no excuse whatever for the enactment of an antilynching bill that would violate the constitutional division of powers between the Federal Government and the States. Indeed, the proposal of Federal penalties for State officials who fail to do their duty was never acceptable. It presumes to exercise a power which the Constitution denies to the Federal Government. Failure of a few States adequately to protect their own citizens, inexcusable though it is, does not justify such a gross encroachment upon their constitutional rights.

When such cogent objections to the bill are added to the fact that the States have almost completed the task of putting their own houses in order, no reasonable excuse is left for reviving the antilynching bill in Congress. Regardless of what action the House may take, the bill will doubtless remain a dead letter. Yet some legislators insist on reviving it in an election year in the hope of winning votes.

The issue, of course, is not lynching. That outrageous and uncivilized practice is condemned by almost every Member of Congress. With the current improvement in State law enforcement, it will doubtless soon be wiped out. The question by which the House is confronted is whether one group of legislators shall be permitted to make political capital out of this general hatred of lynching to the detriment of a crowded legislative program.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HILL].

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, the wise man changes his mind often, the fool never. I lay no claim to wisdom, but I believe I can follow in the footsteps of wise men. I have changed my mind since last session and shall vote against this bill. [Applause.] I voted yesterday to bring it on the floor of the House because I always believe in bringing measures up on the floor of the House for discussion.

I shall vote against this bill, first, because I believe it is unconstitutional. I cannot agree with my genial friend from Kansas [Mr. HOUSTON] that we should leave this to the courts.

Mr. HOUSTON. What are they for?

Mr. HILL. To try cases under the law and not to usurp the functions of Congress to legislate by declaring our laws unconstitutional. I have always contended that we here in the House should determine whether or not a law is constitutional before we pass it.

Mr. HOUSTON. I should like to know how the gentleman voted on the Guffey coal bill.

Mr. HILL. There are 300 lawyers in this House, and I may say that I believe a great many of them stand as high in matters of constitutional law as judges of our Federal courts, both in years gone by and now. Therefore, we should decide here whether or not a law is constitutional, and if we believe it is unconstitutional, as I believe this bill is, we should vote against it.

The second reason I shall vote against the bill is, as has been stated here, that the people in the South are taking care of this problem. Lynchings have decreased in number until there were only three lynchings last year. To those persons who come from New York and Chicago—and I live in the North—let me say do not try to take the mote out of your brother's eye and leave the beam in your own. There is some crime in New York and Chicago that you had better take care of without looking down South.

The third reason I shall vote against this bill is that it is sectional. To my mind there is no North, no South, no East, and no West. I taught school for years. I studied history. I read northern histories that filled me somewhat with prejudice and suspicion toward the South; but in later years I read other histories, and I have read Gone with the Wind, and I have found that the South has as good men right here in this House as has the North. I have a high regard for them and I have a high respect for them. I do not believe it is our business to go into the South or any other section and tell them what to do or how to do it. It is their job, it is their business.

President Lincoln was a real friend of the South and had he been spared the South would have been the beneficiary. But factual history tells us that his party of that day, the Thaddeus Stevenses and Charles Sumners, were responsible for one of the most reprehensible periods in our history—the reconstruction era. Let us not at this late day fan the flames of sectional bitterness and hatred. Let us cooperate to constructively build up our Nation as a whole. The South has many grave social problems to solve, as we do elsewhere in this country. We must make a determined effort toward a solution of these problems, but it should be by good will and in a constitutional way. Let me repeat: The democratic way is the constitutional way. Let each State take care of its own criminal procedure. [Applause.]

For these three reasons I shall oppose this bill and cast my vote tomorrow against it. [Applause.]

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. McCORMACK, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 801, to assure to persons within the jurisdiction of every State due process of law and equal protection of the laws, and to prevent the crime of lynching, had come to no resolution thereon.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein the remarks of the gentleman from Alabama, the Honorable WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD, at the Jackson Day dinner in Washington last evening.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that an hour and fifteen minutes of general debate on this resolution remains. There was some conversation with reference to meeting at 11 o'clock tomorrow, but some Members very much interested in this bill had other meetings to attend, so I presume the hour of meeting will be 12 o'clock. However, I do want to serve notice that it is the intention to remain here tomorrow until this matter is disposed of.

The SPEAKER. Under a previous special order of the House, the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURDICK] is recognized for 20 minutes.

WHAT CAN CONGRESS DO?

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, the failure of Congress at this session to enact legislation to protect the lives and well-being of those of our citizens who, because of this continued depression, are unable to protect themselves, will not only be a monumental blunder in statesmanship, but in addition will create in the minds of the millions in distress disrespect for all laws. In failing to act before, we are directly responsible for this condition. It ought not to be difficult, now that we have repeated and repeated evidence of the suffering on the part of millions of our citizens. What more proof do we want? Just what must happen in this country before a Congress will be convinced that action is necessary?

I have often said on the floor of this House that the Members here, with very slight exceptions, represent the will of the voters who sent them here. I believe that is a true statement. What more evidence of some action on the part of Congress to relieve this distress do the voters want? Is there a district in the United States where there is no suffering and want? There may be a few, but there is suffering in 90 percent of all districts and extreme suffering in too many.

In addition to the general result of a continued depression, there are many States where, either through drought, grasshoppers, or floods, the entire income of the people has been cut off until there is another crop. What is our duty with respect to these areas?

There are still nearly 12,000,000 people out of work who want work and cannot find it. What is our duty with respect to these? Shall we adopt the unsound economic theory advocated by the large business interests of the country, represented by the United States Chamber of Commerce? These men have formulated a program for us to follow in this Congress and they say this outline of a legislative program is the cure-all for the unemployment situation. They complain that Congress has so restricted business that it cannot operate fully and completely. Remove these restrictions, they say, and, ipso facto, business will revive and the army of the unemployed will find work.

I for one have no confidence in this program, and I submit my reasons. We cannot have a candid exchange of views unless we are willing to assign reasons for our conclusions.

First, I remember in 1929, when business was at the zenith of its activity in the United States, there was soon a stunning crash before any restrictions had been imposed by Congress. By March 4, 1933, practically all business was dead in its own tracks. Congress would never have attempted to regulate, regiment, and control business if business had not become absolutely impotent to carry itself. If this condition in 1933 came about without unjust restrictions imposed by Congress, what importance can be placed on a statement by these same business interests that, if we follow their program of legislation, we shall revive business and permit the idle workers to go to work? If business could not propel itself in 1933, what assurance have we that it can do so in 1940?

Secondly, representatives of business have stated before the Ways and Means Committee of the House, not once but many times during the last 7 years, that with all restrictions on business removed that have been placed there by the Congress that not more than 3,000,000 of the unemployed could possibly be put back to work. Assuming that 3,000,000 could be put to work through this method, what are we to do with the other 9,000,000 who are also out of work? Business gives us no guaranty as to these. It is not their responsibility; but that becomes the paramount business of this Congress. We cannot escape this responsibility. No government of the people should want to escape it.

Thirdly, the ranks of the unemployed are filling faster than private business or the Members of this Congress realize. No revival of business can possibly absorb these millions now out of work unless we pave the way by legislation that this Congress for 7 years has refused to pass.

Annually 500,000 workers are replaced by improved methods of operation; in many instances one man can do the work today which, in 1932, required 20 men. We know very well that we cannot stop improvement; we cannot stop inventions; we cannot stop science.

Annually another great army appears—500,000 graduates from institutions beyond the high school, come forward to take their places in useful and gainful employment. In the past several years, most of these tramp the streets for a job and do not find it.

Annually, we are sending to the cities 1,000,000 farm people whom we have foreclosed, and driven off the farms. They join the ranks of those looking for a job. They had a job once and a good one, but we have seen fit to sit here, and by abject inertia, permit these foreclosures to go ahead and they have lost that job, and now must find another one, about which they are not familiar. But it is a case of desperation within them—they compete with labor which has already been harassed with the jobless from their own ranks.

Fourth, there is a certain class of workers who, either in private business or under civil service, cannot obtain employment. They are turned out to shift for themselves as best they can—men and women over 50 years of age. They must live for an average expectancy of 20 years. How will they sustain themselves when a deaf ear is turned to them no matter what their appeal. Business certainly does not intend to find employment for these millions. They will not employ them now, and they will not in the future.

What about the citizens who are 60 years or older. There are 8,000,000 of them who cannot maintain themselves without some work or some adequate security. That we have not provided. We have provided a dole—not the least above common relief. We have thus far made beggars of our aged. We have had an opportunity to remedy this situation but the House will remember that out of a total membership of 435 only 101 Members voted for this old-age security, which, while security for the aged was, under the Townsend bill, security for the middle-aged and the young and the unemployed. Business makes no mention of these citizens.

Thus far in this speech, I have found fault with what we have done, and with organized business which desires us to make matters worse. I shall now turn to what can be done if we desire to bring back life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness to at least 62,000,000 people in this country. Remember too, that it is not only those who have no jobs—those who have been forced out of their homes in the cities and in the country who are in distress—but there is another multitude who are not on relief, who still have a home, but who are living on the last balance of their life's savings.

Now what can be done by this Congress?

First of all, stop the interest racket. When people cannot pay the principal of their debt, why should they be crowded farther down the ladder to abject want by the exaction of unconscionable interest rates, when, as a matter of fact, we should permit little or nothing to be charged for the use of credit. Certainly we should not charge our citizens for credit more than the cost of it.

To accomplish this result is no puzzle; it is not even a problem. Congress can by an act take over and ever afterward control the credit of the Nation for the benefit of all the people. Why should this Government pay $1,500,000,000 interest annually on a debt borrowed from itself? Why should we permit a banking system that is a go-between, between the Government and the people, why should we permit a private banking system to exact interest from the people by loaning the Government credit to them? Worst of all, why should we permit this private banking system to charge this Government interest on its own loans, when everyone knows that it is not the private credit which we borrow but the Government's own credit?

If this Congress is to be anything like past sessions in Presidential election years, many political speeches will be made, but I desire to state that in this speech I am not conscious of presenting any partisan controversy. Both the Republican and Democratic Parties have had an opportunity to enact this program into law, but neither has done so.

During the present administration for some reason, which I cannot explain, the President has refused to put an end to this devastating interest system. My only explanation is that, like Benjamin Franklin, he has been surrounded by advisers who, with premeditated design, have sought to perpetuate the control of the Nation's credit by private individuals. I yet have hopes that the President will yet see the situation as it really is, break with these advisers, and strike a blow for the people of this country.

In the Seventy-third Congress authority was given the President to issue $3,000,000,000 of Treasury notes, as notes, and not be backed by any commodity—gold or anything else. If this power had been exercised, the interest on $3,000,000,000 could have been saved annually for 7 years, or a net saving to the people of this country of $550,000,000.

Again, certificates could have been issued to cover the profit in the silver-purchase operation and the $1,800,000,000 gold stabilization fund. In all, from this source over $3,000,000,000 in certificates could have been issued and the interest stopped on a like amount of bonds.

In addition, we have $17,000,000,000 in gold stored away in the hills of Kentucky, and assuming that a gold dollar could properly be issued on a basis of a gold reserve of 40 percent, $42,000,000,000 in Treasury or gold certificates could be issued and still have a legitimate base of the issuance of that currency. Instead of being in debt $45,000,000,000, all represented by interest-bearing bonds, we would have a free circulating medium not drawing interest. Our bonds could have been called in and paid and the interest graft in this country destroyed.

What the President has done in respect to this is the same thing the Republicans did when they were in power; hence I am not raising a political issue as to the two major parties in the United States by merely stating the facts which cannot be disputed.

The people of the United States will demand this program of money reform just as soon as enough of them know how the present system works and that the present money system is the root of all the evils of our economic life. It seems to me that we have evidence enough to convince the most stubborn adherent of the present money system that a change is necessary; indeed, that such a change is imperative if democracy is to live in this great Nation.

I would next and immediately put a stop to the foreclosure of any home in America where the failure to pay is not due to the thing within the control of the home owner. Leave him where he is, stop the interest, and provide him with the means to work or produce under a pay system that shall make it possible for him to pay his debts and sustain his family. To drive them out of the possession of their homes is only to increase our own appropriations for general relief.

Such farmers as have been dispossessed should be refinanced either on their own farms or on abandoned farms under a long-term-payment plan with no interest charge save the cost of handling the loan.

If this Congress has the courage to take over the absolute control of the Nation's credit and abolish the present banking system, issue currency direct without first issuing bonds to draw interest for the next 50 years, money can be loaned to farm and city home owners at a rate not in excess of one-half of 1 percent.

What about cities, counties, and States? Most States, most counties, most cities could and would take care of their own relief problem if credit could be borrowed from the Government without interest. What deters cities, counties, and States today from borrowing to pay relief expenditures? There are two reasons: First, they cannot obtain a loan. Secondly, they could never repay it with the present interest system increasing the loan faster than taxes can reduce it.

I would next put a tax on business sufficient to pay the 8,000,000 citizens in this country over 60 years of age money enough every month to satisfy every necessary want and by so doing release money enough at close intervals to prevent hoarding and accomplish such a circulation of credit as would revive every legitimate business in the country.

Lastly I would immediately set in motion planned Government work for not only the idle who are here now but to employ the many millions more who will join the army of the unemployed every year. Government-planned work is the only answer to the increasing unemployment in the United States. We have made a poor job of this employment in the past, but it is not the fault of those administering relief work. I doubt if any such huge undertaking could be operated with less dishonesty than has our relief organization. It has faults—many of them—but the greatest fault of all is that we have considered relief merely as a temporary matter and not a condition that is here to stay. Should we wake up and realize that we must do this job we have the brains in this country to do the job, and do it well. Every dollar expended on planned and necessary work is a dollar added to the value of our resources.

In these 20 minutes I cannot, of course, go into all the details necessary to a complete proof of the necessity of our acting upon the matters which I here suggest, but I can leave with you an outline of principles which cannot be disputed and suggest a plan of action that will bring back whatever activity there still remains with the people, and which they cannot express or realize because of the impediments which I here seek to remove.

It cannot be said I am wrong, because nothing of this program has ever been tried. What we have tried and which has run up a public debt of $45,000,000,000 cannot defend itself, because every element that we have tried to eradicate is still here. Shall the advocates of what we have done be permitted to rise up and condemn a program which has not been tried? Shall those who have nothing but failures to their credit be followed when they say this program is not sound?

There is now before this Congress, and has been for 6 years, bills and resolutions embodying this full program. No criticism of present conditions is offered without supplying a remedy. Among the bills before Congress directly offering the remedy or the way out of our present financial debacle are:

First. House Resolution 217. Restore to Congress the power to coin money and regulate the value thereof.

Second. H. R. 7600. Eliminate debt money and taxes.

Third. H. R. 6466. Townsend bill.

Fourth. H. R. 7528. Frazier-Lemke moratorium.

Fifth. H. R. 6151. Labor-hour money.

Sixth. H. R. 1675. Peterson farm tenant bill. [Applause.]

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. MICHENER (at the request of Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT), for today, on account of illness.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED

Bills of the Senate of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

S. 823. An act for the relief of John P. Shorter; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 2384. An act for the relief of Lyle L. Bressler; to the Committee on Claims.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 32 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Wednesday, January 10, 1940, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS

6115. Also, resolution of the Scarsdale Post, No. 52, Department of New York, American Legion, urging that the Dies committee be continued for at least another year and be provided with adequate appropriation for necessary expenses; to the Committee on Rules.

6116. Also, resolution of the Holy Name Society of St. Teresa's Church, Brooklyn, N. Y., condemning the dictatorial action of the National Association of Broadcasters in forcing radio stations, members of the association, to withdraw time from the Reverend Charles E. Coughlin, adjudging him to be a controversialist; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

6117. Also, resolution of the Republican Club of Astoria, Long Island, N. Y., that if sugar legislation is enacted in 1940 (when the present Sugar Act of 1937 expires) legislation must provide that there be no further expansion in the importation of refined sugar made in the tropical islands for our markets, and that every effort be made to regain the lost work which rightfully belongs to the home workers by providing that workers in the tropics produce raw cane sugar only, permitting the refining of that sugar to be done by highly paid American workmen at home; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

6118. By Mr. PFEIFER: Petition of the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, Washington, D. C., urging support of House bill 2726; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

6119. Also, petition of the United Sugar Refinery Workers, Long Island City, N. Y., concerning the importation of sugar; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

6125. By Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey: Resolution adopted by Herbert Cawley Post, No. 188, High Bridge, N. J., recommending that the activities of the Dies committee be continued during the year 1940; to the Committee on Rules.

6126. By the SPEAKER: Petition of the North Long Beach Democratic Club, Long Beach, Calif., petitioning consideration of their resolution with reference to Byron N. Scott; to the Committee on Elections No. 2.

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 10, 1940

The Chaplain, Rev. Zeb Barney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God, our Heavenly Father, of whom all fatherhood is named: Deliver us, we beseech Thee, from the sins that divide us, from forgetfulness of Thee, from indifference to our fellow men, and from every evil which obstructs Thy saving purpose. Do Thou teach us that truth as wisdom and wisdom as truth can only be found in the ways of honor; that in the paths of shame we meet but endless and hopeless error.

Consecrate, O Son of God, the homes of this Nation; cleanse our politics; hallow our daily work; save us from ourselves; and raise us, Thou who art exalted at the Father's side, to live with Thee in God; and may the power and glory of Thy love be known even to the ends of the earth, for Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory for ever and ever. Amen.

ATTENDANCE OF SENATORS

STYLES BRIDGES, a Senator from the State of New Hampshire, HENRY CABOT LODGE, Jr., a Senator from the State of Massachusetts, and KENNETH MCKELLAR, a Senator from the State of Tennessee, appeared in their seats today.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Monday, January 8, 1940, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States submitting nominations were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

SALES AND TANGIBLE PERSONAL PROPERTY TAXES IN NATIONAL PARKS—RECOMMITTAL OF BILL

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, heretofore Calendar No. 1071, House bill 6687, to authorize the levy of State, Territory, and District of Columbia taxes upon, with respect to, or measured by sales, purchases, or use of tangible personal property or upon sellers, purchasers, or users of such property measured by sales, purchases, or use thereof occurring in United States national parks, military and other reservations or sites over which the United States Government may have jurisdiction, was favorably reported by the Finance Committee. I have conferred with the chairman of the committee, and some other members of the committee who are present; and I ask unanimous consent that House bill 6687 be recommitted to the Finance Committee. Some amendments which obviously ought to be made in the bill were overlooked.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Georgia? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

INVESTIGATION OF CAMPAIGN EXPENDITURES

Mr. GEORGE. I submit the usual resolution for the investigation of campaign expenditures. I do not ask for the consideration of the resolution. There are reasons why I think it should go to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and I ask that the resolution be referred to that committee.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 212) was read and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, as follows:

Resolved, That a special committee consisting of five Senators, to be appointed by the Vice President, is hereby authorized and directed to investigate the campaign expenditures of the various Presidential candidates, Vice Presidential candidates, and candidates for the United States Senate, in all parties, the names of the persons, firms, or corporations subscribing the amount contributed, the method of expenditure of said sums, and all facts in relation thereto, not only as to the subscriptions of money and expenditures thereof, but as to the use of any other means or influence, including the promise or use of patronage or use of any public funds, and all other facts in relation thereto which would not only be of public interest but which would aid the Senate in enacting any remedial legislation or in deciding any contests which might be instituted involving the right to a seat in the United States Senate.

No Senator shall be appointed upon said committee from a State in which a Senator is to be elected at the general election in 1940. The investigation hereby provided for, in all the respects above enumerated, shall apply to candidates and to contests before primaries, conventions, and the contests and campaign terminating in the general election in 1940.

Said committee is hereby authorized to act upon its own initiative and upon such information as in its judgment may be reasonable or reliable. Upon complaint being made before said committee, under oath, by any person, persons, candidate, or political committee, setting forth allegations as to facts which, under this resolution it would be the duty of said committee to investigate, the said committee shall investigate such charges as fully as though it were acting upon its own motion, unless, after a hearing upon such complaint, the committee shall find that the allegations in said complaint are immaterial or untrue.

Said committee is hereby authorized, in the performance of its duties, to sit at such times and places, either in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, as it deems necessary or proper. It is specifically authorized to require the attendance of witnesses by subpoena or otherwise; to require the production of books, papers, and documents; and to employ counsel, experts, clerical, and other assistants; and to employ stenographers at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per 100 words.

Said committee is hereby specifically authorized to act through any subcommittee authorized to be appointed by said committee. The chairman of said committee or any member of any subcommittee may administer oaths to witnesses and sign subpoenas for witnesses; and every person duly summoned before said committee, or any subcommittee thereof, who refuses or fails to obey the process of said committee or who appears and refuses to answer questions pertinent to said investigation shall be punished as prescribed by law.

The expenses of said investigation, not exceeding in the aggregate $30,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate on vouchers signed by the chairman of the committee or the chairman of any subcommittee.

All hearings before said committee shall be public, and all orders or decisions of the committee shall be public.

The committee shall make a full report to the Senate on the first day of the next session of the Congress.

ASSISTANT CLERK, COMMITTEE ON ENROLLED BILLS

Mr. MILLER (for Mrs. CARAWAY) submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 213), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Enrolled Bills hereby is authorized to employ for the remainder of the present session an assistant clerk to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate at the rate of $1,800 per annum.

WAR MINERALS RELIEF COMMISSION (S. DOC. NO. 143)

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the report of the War Minerals Relief Commission transmitted to the Congress on January 4, 1940, by the Secretary of the Interior, be printed as a Senate document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Calhoun, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 884. An act to add certain lands to the Siuslaw National Forest in the State of Oregon;

H. R. 3051. An act for the relief of certain workers performing emergency work at Cairo, Ill., in the Ohio River flood of 1937;

PROPOSED JOINT COMMITTEE FOR STUDY OF BUDGET

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a concurrent resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 33) submitted by Mr. HARRISON on January 8, 1940, was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring). That there is hereby established a joint congressional committee to be composed of six members of the Senate Committee on Finance and six members of the Senate Committee on Appropriations, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and six members of the House Committee on Ways and Means and six members of the House Committee on Appropriations, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives. The committee is authorized and directed to make a full and complete study and analysis of the Budget of the United States Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and the message of the President accompanying the Budget, with a view to assisting the Congress in formulating a comprehensive fiscal program which will tend ultimately and at the earliest practicable date to bring revenues and expenditures into balance.

For the purposes of this concurrent resolution, the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the third session of the Seventy-sixth Congress as it deems advisable. The committee shall report to the two Houses of Congress the results of its study, together with its recommendations, not later than the sixtieth day after the establishment of the committee. Such reports shall be referred to the standing committees of the Senate and House of Representatives from which the membership of the committee established by this concurrent resolution was appointed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, in view of the assurances made by the able Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], and recorded in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD day before yesterday, that he will carry out the objectives of the Republican conference, I do not now persist further in my objection.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I wish to submit an additional observation respecting the agreement of the Senator from Mississippi that this inquiry, if made, will include a serious survey of the fundamental questions of policy involved in the Army and naval appropriations.

The distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] submitted a memorandum for the RECORD on January 8, indicating a break-down in the proposed naval appropriations for the present fiscal year, naval appropriations being the only ones, I repeat, which the President recommends in excess of last year's appropriations. For example, in the memorandum submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts there is a total of at least $64,000,000 "for fitting out vessels for neutrality patrol. The amount may be as much as $125,000,000.

Mr. President, it seems to me that we cannot have a realistic approach to the economy problem until some of the fundamental policy questions such as the neutrality patrol are settled. What does it mean that we are asked for $64,000,000 or more to implement the Pan-American safety belt which upon our own responsibility we are undertaking to extend from 300 to 1,000 miles into the Atlantic Ocean, making, perhaps, a provocation belt out of it rather than a safety belt? Must we not first determine whether we shall approve and accept this new safety belt idea, and whether we are willing to police it against other powers which decline to recognize our jurisdiction?

In the testimony of Admiral Stark this week—this is another example—we hear that we are about to be committed to 50,000- or 60,000-ton battleships, although the last time the Senate passed upon the question of battleship tonnage it was very eager to confine battleship tonnage to 35,000 tons, so that we should not be responsible for leading the world into a new phase and field of naval competition. Is the 50,000- or 60,000-ton battleship the useful thing to do with $130,000,000 or $140,000,000 in the way of national defense, or are there some new lessons being learned in this present war in respect to the relative utility and availability of large naval vessels? Should we now embark upon any such innovation, such novelty in naval construction, when the ships cannot be finished under 5 or 6 years and by that time contemporary war experience may have repealed all our present knowledge on the subject?

These are incidental questions, Mr. President, which illuminate the necessity for a complete, thorough-going survey of the whole question of national defense, the whole policy that we are to pursue in connection with national defense, the whole question of how our money shall be spent in respect to the national defense. I want the Army and the Navy to have everything essential to rational national defense. I believe in sturdy preparedness. But I do not believe in loading a bankrupt Treasury with needless burdens or unwise adventures even in the exalted name of national defense.

I fail to understand how any of us, at either end of the Capitol, can approach the question of this year's Budget and appropriations without a realistic study of these terrifically fundamental questions with respect to the Navy and the Army.

The able Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] has initiated an investigation upon the responsibility of his own committee into these factors. I heartily welcome that investigation, and I know how thoroughly any inquiry which is under the direction of the able Senator from South Carolina will be pressed. The fact remains that the Harrison proposal is the first effort that has been made to bring the question of revenue and appropriations within the four walls of the same room; it is the first realistic effort to have a congressional budget. I submit that this laudable effort is bound to fail except as it includes under the promise of the Senator from Mississippi, supplemented by the work of the Byrnes committee, a rock-bottom, courageous, thoroughgoing, realistic exploration of the question of what we got for our money out of the eight or ten or twelve billion dollars we have appropriated for national defense during the last decade and what our naval and military policy is going to be henceforward. That is the point at which not only the emphasis rests in respect to defense but that is the point where emphasis rests in respect to economy. We are not at war. We are not going to war. The Budget must not deny these specifications.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, in view of the situation which confronts us, there are one or two suggestions which I feel justified in offering.

I think it is very fortunate to have a recognition such as is involved in the pending concurrent resolution of the seriousness of American financial problems. I think, without undue lack of seriousness, that the President, with a twinkle in his eye, has again outsmarted the Congress. He has submitted a Budget with material cuts. The figures of the Budget are such that if Congress should raise the appropriations it would break through the so-called debt limit or would have to levy increased taxes.

The President in his Budget has cut certain items very dear to the hearts of Congress. For instance, he has reduced aids to agriculture $413,000,000. He has reduced relief recommendations $562,000,000. He has reduced the National Youth Administration $15,000,000. He has reduced the C. C. C. $64,000,000. He has reduced the public-road fund $45,000,000. He has reduced the public-buildings recommendations $20,000,000. He has reduced military posts scattered throughout the country $53,000,000. He has reduced flood-control and river-and-harbor items $98,000,000. In the aids to agriculture portion of the $413,000,000 he has eliminated parity payments of $225,000,000, rural rehabilitation $143,000,000, surplus-commodity appropriation $40,000,000, farm tenancy $15,000,000.

I am merely saying that the President, I think, with a twinkle in his eye, has put this babe on our doorstep. He is going to be in position to say to us: "I gave you a Budget recommendation which will not increase the debt limit. If you, the Members of Congress, see fit to put back these items, you are the ones who are responsible for going beyond the debt limit, or else you should levy additional taxes."

I think Congress is in a position to meet the situation. I want to see Congress say to the President: "You have made these cuts. They are your recommendations, and we will stand by them. It is your responsibility if you have cut too deeply." That is the feeling I have. I am unwilling to have put upon Congress the burden of breaking through the debt-limit or of levying additional taxes. Differing from many other Senators, I think there is a very easy way and a very proper way to allow a restoration of some of these items without going to the so-called debt limit. I would take off the increased appropriation for so-called national defense. The President recommends $1,800,000,000—32 percent of the estimated revenue of the Government—for national defense, increasing the national-defense provision hundreds of millions of dollars above the appropriation for last year; and the appropriation for last year, or the current fiscal year, exceeded by many million dollars any amount ever before appropriated for that purpose. I am unable to see the necessity for tremendous appropriations for national defense.

During the special session, under the leadership of the Foreign Relations Committee, headed by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the United States proceeded to protect itself against the hazards of international complications. We withdrew ourselves from the high seas. We surrendered rights for which two wars had been fought because we did not want to run the risk of contacts which might result in conflicts. So we are today keeping our ships out of danger zones. We are restraining them from various activities. We are refusing to make loans to belligerents. We are not selling munitions except on a cash-and-carry basis. We are doing things which, to me, are almost humiliating in order to protect ourselves against the hazards of war. Yet now, having gone to these limits, it is suggested to us that we are confronted with a national emergency; that we must cut relief to the farmers, cut relief to the unemployed, cut relief here and there, in order to build more battleships, provide more soldiers, manufacture more munitions—to fight whom? To fight nobody. Nobody has anything we want, and we have nothing anyone else wants.

I think we can make the saving by reducing appropriations for a war which is not coming. We had better spend our money for the farmer, for relief, for soil conservation, for C. C. C. camps, for rural electrification, than for building machinery to destroy human life when we shall have no occasion to use it; and I have the apprehension that once we have built up a navy, once we have fortified islands so far off that we do not know where they are, there will be a temptation to use them. The United States has no occasion at this time, I think, to be uneasy about international troubles.

As to the pending concurrent resolution, fundamentally what it proposes, that Congress study the fiscal needs of the Government, is a wise thing to do. Under the Constitution Congress was given the power of the purse, but it has very largely abdicated the exercise of that power. The concurrent resolution provides for a study by a joint committee of Congress. As I have indicated, I think it is going back to the proper fundamental source. I think, however, the results of the concurrent resolution will be disappointing.

The resolution directs the committee to make a full and complete study and analysis of the Budget for 1941 in 60 days. I say to the Senate that a joint congressional committee could not do it in 6 years. There is no difficulty in laying down a broad fundamental principle. We can get 96 Senators and 435 Representatives to join in a declaration in favor of proper economies. They will all agree to a declaration that it is desirable to balance the Budget; but ask them to do the detail work of fixing the places where the cuts are to be made!

The distinguished, able, and patriotic Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] has thought of this matter partly as he thinks of matters before the Finance Committee. They deal in broad, general principles. They lay down rules which apply to everybody. The measures before them are tax laws, fiscal rules of some kind, general in their character. The Appropriations Committee has a different and a less agreeable function. It deals not only with thousands but with hundreds of thousands of individual items. It does not deal with general principles. It deals with the question of whether the Congress should appropriate $1,500 or $1,000 for one purpose, whether it should appropriate $1,000,000 or $10,000,000 for another purpose. It deals with a multitude of individual items. The work of the Appropriations Committee requires a detailed knowledge of Government activities, of Government structure. It is not possible to work out appropriations, it is not possible to work out a Budget proposal, in terms of generalities; or, if that is done, it is useless.

I am in favor of the creation of the proposed joint committee, partly because I want some of the members of other committees to understand the problem. I want them to go to work on it. I want them to take up this thousand-page Budget, with hundreds of items on a page, and tell us how we shall balance the Budget. Under the concurrent resolution they are going to tell us in 60 days. I hope they can do so. It they can arouse a public interest, a public sentiment on the matter of national economy, they will perform a great service.

One of the weaknesses of the effort for economy which has been made in this body and in the other House is the lack of public support. We in Congress cannot economize unless we have the people at home back of us. Up to the present time the people at home generally have been interested in the construction of projects or the employment of persons in the local communities, and there has not been support for those who have been fighting the battle of economy and sound finance.

Mr. President, what Congress wants is a method of painless budget balancing. It wants to balance the Budget without any pain or suffering or any deprivation anywhere. We are to reduce our expenditures by billions, or increase our taxes, and have everybody enjoy it. There is no method by which to reach such a result. Neither the proposed committee nor any other committee can devise a plan to balance the Budget without involving almost insurrection. When we get the Budget balanced it will be done within the Congress of the United States, or in the administration, by those who are willing, as the soldier does in war, to go into the front-line trenches and sacrifice his political life for the sake of his country. We will not balance the Budget until we find men willing to surrender their offices in the Congress in order to do their country a service. So long as Members of Congress have demands made upon them by those who send them here to spend money rather than to save it, we will have an unbalanced Budget. I am hoping that the proposed committee in its report will say these things to us very plainly and will put the burden back where it belongs.

Some would criticize the President. The President is not to blame for the unbalanced Budget. Every dollar that has been spent has been spent by act of Congress. If Congress accepts the recommendations and the directions of the President, and the Budget is thereby unbalanced, it is the fault of Congress and not of the President. I have no patience with an effort to evade the responsibility by saying we did this or that because the President asked that it be done. In any event, the President is now asking for reductions in expenditures, and Congress is to have a chance to say whether or not it will now follow the recommendations. I am saying to my colleagues as a guess that many of those who have fought some of us when we were advocating economy will be in the van in voting to restore the cut in appropriations under the Budget which the President recommends.

Mr. President, what Congress needs is facts. What is needed by the Appropriations Committee is facts. How do the Appropriations Committees operate and how does the Budget operate? Officials of the departments who want appropriations are the only ones who are heard by the committees. In the Senate Committee on Appropriations whom do we hear? We hear only representatives of departments urging increases of appropriations. Never does anyone appear before the Committee on Appropriations, so far as I know, representing the taxpayer, representing the general public, urging a reduction of appropriations.

I know of one man who came before the Committee on Appropriations and said that the recommendation of his superior budget officer was more than he needed in his particular department. He is no longer in the service.

It is perfectly proper that the Executive should have a budget committee or bureau to sift out and to study the demands of the departments. But the Congress of the United States needs a budget committee of its own. The Committee on Appropriations needs a force of experts serving not only 12 months in the year, but year by year, gathering information for the committee from the standpoint of the taxpayer, scrutinizing every request that is made by a department. Instead of having the members of the committee dependent solely upon recommendations from executive departments, upon testimony from department officers, let the Committee on Appropriations—let the Congress—have a fact-finding organization of its own. Congress is responsible for levying taxes and spending money. It cannot legislate soundly unless it has facts, and the Congress of the United States has no agency of its own whose function is to get the facts upon which it can exercise this, its most important function.

Mr. GILLETTE and Mr. SHIPSTEAD addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield first to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. GILLETTE. As an instance of the need now for such a fact-finding budget committee as has just been suggested so ably by the Senator, I wonder if he noticed that a high naval officer stated yesterday before a House committee that there was included in the proposed river and harbor appropriation an item of $4,000,000 to start the fortification of Guam—a proposal which was rejected by the Congress emphatically at the last session.

Mr. ADAMS. It attracted my attention quite forcefully. I now yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I have often thought that the Budget should be responsible to the Appropriations Committees of the Congress instead of to the executive department. I think the Senator is perfectly correct that to have department heads make out their own budgets is putting the cart before the horse. They should make their requests, but what would the Senator think of Congress having control of the Budget?

Mr. ADAMS. I reply to the Senator that, of course, Congress should have control of it. But I think there should be two budget agencies, one to advise the President, one to sift out the requests so that the President can say, "I think my department should have this." Then the Congress should have its own investigatory force to undertake an investigation and to check the items.

Mr. President, I will give an illustration: During the last session of Congress we were urged most strenuously to make an appropriation for an air-research laboratory. The statement was made that the United States was some years behind Germany in its airplane research; that if we did not spend some money on such a project we would be so far behind that we could not catch up, and that our airplanes did not compare with those abroad. Today the American airplane in Europe has shown its superiority over every European airplane; and we have not sent our best abroad.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. KING. I wish to say to the Senator, in part, in reply to the statement made by the Senator from Minnesota, that several years ago I suggested the appointment of a congressional budget body, and more than a year ago I introduced Senate bill 2545, which provided for the establishment of a congressional agency on appropriations. It was to parallel, in a way, the work of the executive Budget Bureau. It provided for a congressional budget committee so that Congress might be advised in regard to appropriations sought, and have testimony taken in support of demands for appropriations, in order to be better prepared to pass upon the appropriation bills when they were submitted. Unfortunately my bill died a-borning. Those who were so anxious for economy did not see fit to have the measure enacted. If it had been enacted, there would be no occasion for the resolution which has been offered by the Senator from Mississippi. I shall introduce the bill again and ask for its consideration at an early date.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield further?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. If the Senator will permit me, in view of the statement of the Senator from Utah, let me say that a couple of years ago I introduced a joint resolution calling for the establishment of an economic research council to assist the committees of Congress. At one time it looked as though there was considerable interest in the proposal, but evidently the departments, who seem to control the Budget, got in their work, and the proposal made in the joint resolution suddenly lost all support. I hope that the Senator from Utah and the Senator from Colorado will continue their efforts to have established an independent council of Congress to check up on the departments.

When appropriation bills under the Budget come to the Committee on Appropriations of either House, we have to take the word of the heads of the departments, and Congress is helpless to check them.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I merely wanted to make some of these suggestions, because, if the proposed committee is appointed, I shall not be on it, and I wanted the suggestions in the RECORD.

I have been disappointed to find that, though a few years ago we were talking of balancing the Budget, now the question is as to reducing the deficit. Apparently a sincere desire for balancing the Budget has given way to argument as to the extent to which the deficit should be reduced. Unless we eliminate the deficit, sooner or later we will meet disaster. Merely discussing reduction of deficits, as distinguished from balancing the Budget, is tantamount to saying, "Let us postpone disaster rather than avoid it." Unless we set our house in order, unless we make preparation to balance the Budget, if we accept deficits as inevitable, disaster and catastrophe will be unavoidable. We have been going down a great, broad river, as it were, not only floating down but rushing down. We all see that the falls lie below us, but we say, "Well, we are not there yet; perhaps something will happen to save us." If we do not row to the shore sooner or later and tie our boat to something that will hold we shall go over the falls.

Mr. President, we hear discussion as to the amount of Federal indebtedness the country can stand. We can find out how much indebtedness it can endure, but the day we find out the limit of Federal indebtedness is the day that catastrophe will overtake us. I hope we may never find out what the limit of Federal indebtedness is. I hope that through the work of a joint committee consideration may be given to all these matters and that out of that study may come the two things we need: One, the ascertainment of facts for the benefit of Congress, upon which rests the responsibility for all fiscal matters; and the other, that Congress may, through the efforts of the proposed committee, or otherwise, be inspired with the courage to do that which is necessary in order to save the Government from financial catastrophe.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution submitted by the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, there has been no general change in the resolution as it was presented day before yesterday, and I understand that agreement has been reached as the result of conversations had between the chairman of the Committee on Finance and the majority leader and the minority leader. Now I should like to know what the understanding is as to what the proposed committee is expected to do in the way of study and making recommendations with reference to the national defense expenditures. Not having been associated with the conversations, I feel that I should like to have a statement from the majority and minority leaders and from the chairman of the Finance Committee as to what is expected to be done. What is proposed to be done under the pending resolution? Would the majority and the minority leaders be willing to state to the Senate what kind of investigation is going to be made, and to what extent it is going to be made? What kind of jurisdiction is the committee going to assume with reference to recommendations concerning expenditures for national defense? Will there be anything other than a statement of the facts as to how much has been appropriated, and whether or not that is sufficient or insufficient?

Mr. HARRISON. If the Senator is propounding his question to me—

Mr. BORAH. I do propound it to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. I should think that the joint committee, within just as short a time as it could under the limitation fixed, should go into the question of the increased appropriation for national defense, which is one of the major questions involved in the President's message, because in connection with it the President requests the enactment of additional taxes for that purpose. I think the joint committee, if it should be created, should not work against the Naval Affairs Committee of the Senate or the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations dealing with naval appropriations. The proposed committee and the other committees I have mentioned ought to work together and try to cooperate in as careful a study as possible on the basis of the message presented by the President and the accompanying Budget. And naturally, when doing that, the joint committee, if created, should have the benefit of the presence, so far as possible, of the chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee and such other members of that committee as can attend the meetings when the committee is studying the particular questions in which those members are interested, as well as the chairman of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations dealing with naval affairs and the members of that committee, if they can be present. The same statement applies to the chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee of the House and the chairman of the Subcommittee on Appropriations in the House as well as such House committee members as can attend. Also heads of various departments and anyone else who has a particular knowledge of the question under consideration should be in attendance to present their information, in order that we may have full cooperation, so that an effort may be made to arrive at the best possible conclusions leading eventually toward an approach to a balanced Budget.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, would the Senator say that in his opinion the question of the necessity of the appropriations for expenditures which have been recommended will be considered by the proposed committee?

Mr. HARRISON. I do not think there is any doubt about that. If I should be on the committee—and I stated on Monday that I am not a candidate for membership on the committee—I should certainly want that to be done.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask the majority leader if that is his view of the matter?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that under the terms of the concurrent resolution the joint committee, if it should be created, would have absolute and comprehensive authority to go into any phase of our public expenditures as presented to the Congress in the Budget and the message of the President. It would have the right to go into the question of the wisdom of any expenditure recommended, or of any reduction recommended, or the question of taxation. I think that under the general language of the resolution the committee could explore the entire field of public expenditures, and make findings of fact and recommendations to the Congress, which, of course, would have to be submitted to the respective appropriating and revenue committees of the two Houses.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I think the language of the resolution is sufficiently broad to enable the committee to go into any phase of the matter, but in view of the fact that no express directions are given in the resolution, I am anxious to know whether the spirit behind the proposed investigation is such as to evince a willingness to go into the question of the necessity of the vast expenditure recommended for so-called national defense.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I have no doubt that the spirit which actuated the Senator from Mississippi in drawing and offering the resolution comprehended just that thing. Of course, I do not know who will be on the committee. I know one Senator who will not be on the committee, but I cannot speak for anyone else. I should assume that if such a committee were appointed it would recognize its responsibility and perform its duties as expeditiously and as comprehensively as possible.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the recommendations which have been made will result in cuts in a great many items in which the Congress is interested, but unless there is a determined effort upon the part of the leaders, upon the part of those who are directing the inquiry, that there shall be a conscientious investigation as to the necessity of increasing the national defense, and go into the details which disclose the necessity and reveal the things which lie behind the recommendations, there will be no recommendations made to Congress which will amount to anything whatever. Congress, as it has repeatedly done heretofore, will take care of those items which the President has indicated might be cut. Those items will be restored, and then the question of national defense will have a half-hearted opposition, as is usual, and the present Congress will adjourn with an increase in appropriations having been made by it which will not be paralleled in the history of our country.

Mr. BARKLEY. I may say to the Senator that I agree thoroughly with him in his remarks. If the proposed committee is to go at the matter in a lukewarm fashion, and not be enthusiastic for the attainment of the object we desire, of course the committee will accomplish very little. But I hope the committee will be made up of such Members, both from the House and the Senate, as to justify the belief that we can bring about a closer approach between expenditures and governmental receipts. The question of the extraordinary increase for the Navy is one of the questions we must look into and analyze most closely.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, take for instance, the matter of the Panama declaration. If we should assume to put sanctions behind that declaration we would likely need all the appropriations which have been recommended. Those questions to my mind are a part of this investigation. We cannot determine this whole matter unless we determine those questions. We must take into consideration the responsibilities we may assume. I note that Mr. Chamberlain last night said some very complimentary things about the President's peace movement and his recommendations, but he said the time was coming when Great Britain would have to have men, when blood would have to be spilled; that these other things were very nice, but that they would not meet the situation. These are the conditions which are approaching, and which are all a part of the investigation of the proposals for the national defense.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, with reference to the appropriations for the Navy, let me call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the Appropriations Committee is not presented with the question of determining the policy as to what kind of Navy shall be provided for. That policy is determined by the Congress. As a result of legislation first considered in the Naval Affairs Committee, certain authorizations are made for the construction of ships of a certain type. Appropriations may not be made unless the Congress has authorized them. Then the Congress determines, in the appropriation bill, only the question as to how much money shall be spent for the next year to carry out the purposes of the legislation previously enacted by the Congress.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] asks about the investigation which would be made. I do not know what investigation would be made by the so-called supercommittee, or the joint committee which is now proposed; but an investigation has been made and is now being made by the Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives into the details of the Naval Establishment. If the investigation is like that of other years, the result will be about 400 or 500 pages of printed testimony. When the bill comes to the Senate Appropriations Committee the subcommittee will sit for days investigating the whole question, as the Senator from Idaho desires that it should be investigated. However, our difficulty is that we can never induce individual Members of the Senate to divert from their other duties the necessary time to read the 400 or 500 pages of testimony taken before the House committee and the testimony taken before the Senate committee, which in almost every instance consumes at least 10 days and sometimes several weeks. If we could do that, we feel that we would have greater support when the Appropriations Committee makes a recommendation to the Senate.

There will be no doubt about the action of the Appropriations Committee. This year, as it has done every other year, the Appropriations Committee will make an inquiry into every recommendation, even for the promotion of a $1,200 clerk in the Navy Department, as well as the big question as to how much shall be spent for the increase of the Naval Establishment.

I do not agree that we can say that our country will never be in danger of war, and that there is no excuse for considering an increase of any item in the Naval Establishment because we can be satisfied that there is no danger of war. If every man in his heart believed that to be true, there would be no excuse whatever for any Army bill or Navy bill. If that were true, why appropriate a dollar for national defense? We might better appropriate it for other purposes or reduce taxes. However, because we are not convinced that that is the case, and because we cannot be convinced of it, we cannot abandon the defense of the Nation, which, after all, under the Constitution is the primary duty of the Federal Government.

It may be the subject of debate as to whether or not States, counties, or cities should take care of other questions. We must take care of the question of national defense. My belief is that we should keep our feet on the ground and, even with respect to current appropriations, we should make inquiry to determine their present status, how the money is being spent, what we are getting for it, and whether or not it is being wisely spent. That is the important thing to do before we enter upon the consideration of the estimates for the next fiscal year.

I can speak only for the naval subcommittee of the Senate Appropriations Committee, when I say that such an inquiry will be made; and I hope when it is made the joint committee will find itself in accord with the views of the Appropriations Committee. If it does not, a splendid opportunity will be afforded to present to the Senate the question as to who is right—the Appropriations Committee, when it says that so much money is needed for the Naval Establishment, or the joint committee, which has set another figure. Then if the joint committee can convince the Senate of the wisdom of its conclusion, the Senate will adopt it. If the Senate is convinced of the wisdom of the recommendations of the Appropriations Committee, it will adopt the figure of the Appropriations Committee, whatever it may be.

Therefore, the proposed investigation can do no harm. It may be helpful. It ought to be helpful in the advice it will give to the Appropriations Committee. As the chairman of one subcommittee of the Senate Appropriations Committee, I shall be glad to receive that advice.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator says that in making appropriations the Senate Appropriations Committee does not fix governmental policy, but merely implements the policy which has previously been ordered by act of Congress. I ask the Senator when, for example, the Senate will ever have an opportunity to pass upon the question of the new neutrality patrol, 300 or 1,000 miles at sea, except in connection with the specific appropriations for that purpose as submitted in the Budget.

Mr. BYRNES. There will be no other opportunity. I was speaking of the broad question of capital-ship construction and not of the details, because legislative authority is not necessary for the minor details of expenditure in the Navy Department which are already authorized. If they are not authorized, they are subject to a point of order when embodied in an appropriation bill. The Senate will have ample opportunity, when the deficiency bill and the naval appropriation bill come before the Senate, to determine whether the proposed appropriations are wise or unwise.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Then the Senator agrees that it is an appropriate matter of inquiry, in connection with these new appropriations, to determine for ourselves and state for ourselves whether or not we want to implement a neutrality patrol; whether or not we want to launch 60,000- or 70,000-ton battleships; and whether or not, as a matter of fundamental policy, we want to go into any of the proposed expansions?

Mr. BYRNES. The Appropriations Committee will not determine whether or not we should construct 65,000-ton battleships. Such construction may not take place unless the Congress, as the result of recommendations from the legislative committee, shall bring in new authorizations for the construction of such ships. If the Appropriations Committee should attempt to provide for such construction the items would be subject to a point of order. The Appropriations Committee cannot decide the question of policy. That is a question for the Naval Affairs Committee.

The other question which the Senator suggests, as to the neutrality patrol, is purely a question of appropriation. Not only is it a proper question for the consideration of the Senate but it is the duty of the Senate to determine the question. The Senate will have to pass upon the question whenever the bill comes from the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I was not present during the earlier part of the discussion, and the matter is new to me. If the Senator from South Carolina will yield to me, I should like to ask the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] the purpose of his concurrent resolution. Is it the purpose to have the proposed joint committee supersede the Appropriations Committees of the two Houses or advise the Appropriations Committees? What is the purpose of the concurrent resolution?

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I yield the floor to the Senator from Tennessee. I have no desire to retain the floor.

Mr. McKELLAR. I should like to have the Senator from Mississippi enlighten me on this question.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, together with all the Senator's colleagues, I regret that he was not present during the early part of the discussion. The matter was discussed on Monday last, and in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of that day I expressed my views quite at length.

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall take pleasure in reading them.

Mr. HARRISON. There is no desire upon my part to do anything which would interfere with the Appropriations Committees of the Senate or the House. The proposed joint committee would be composed of 12 Members of the Senate and 12 Members of the House. The President of the Senate would name 6 Members from the Senate Committee on Appropriations and 6 Members from the Senate Committee on Finance. The Speaker of the House would name 6 Members from the House Appropriations Committee and 6 Members from the House Ways and Means Committee. As the Senator appreciates, in the Budget message the President goes into the whole fiscal policy at great length and calls attention to many difficulties. He raises the question of increased taxes and an increase in the appropriations for national defense. He recommends many reductions with respect to which I anticipate quite a battle will be waged on the Senate floor. So the purpose of the concurrent resolution is to synchronize with the appropriations themselves the work of raising the revenue to pay for the appropriations made by Congress. There is no desire to step on the toes of the Appropriations Committees or any other committee of this body or of the House.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let me ask the Senator a practical question. Suppose the joint committee of the two Houses were to fix a sum for national defense—which has been alluded to several times—quite different from the sum fixed by the Appropriations Committee. What would be the result under those circumstances? Would the proposed committee be a supercommittee?

Mr. HARRISON. The joint committee would have no legislative function at all. Its recommendations, when submitted, would be referred to the House Appropriations and Ways and Means Committees and the Senate Finance and Appropriations Committees as the basis upon which we might approach the time when Government expenditures and Government receipts might balance.

Mr. McKELLAR. The duty of the committee would be merely to recommend to the committees of the Senate and the House and to the Senate and the House?

Mr. HARRISON. It would submit its findings and recommendations to the two Houses of Congress, and the Senate and the House in turn would then refer the report to the appropriate committees.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I should like to ask the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] a question. Is it not true that in the early days of the Congress a single committee in the House of Representatives handled both taxation and appropriations?

Mr. HARRISON. I believe that is quite true.

Mr. CONNALLY. That was true in the early days. That procedure was based upon the very theory which the Senator now proposes in his concurrent resolution.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. In the old days, when Congress was young, the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives handled both revenue legislation and appropriations.

Mr. HARRISON. That is true. Let me call attention to a further fact. I do not know about the practice in the House, but in the Senate the chairman and the ranking members of the legislative committees serve with the subcommittees of the Appropriations Committee in considering and writing appropriation bills. I am not sure whether that practice is followed in the House.

Mr. BORAH and Mr. BANKHEAD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I have no controversy with the able Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] with reference to the work of his committee, and I have no doubt that it will be performed with ability and zeal. But what I am anxious to know about is this: The proposed joint committee must have some function and some ultimate object in view with reference to the question of national defense. Take, for instance, the suggestion of the fortification of Guam; would it be the idea of the able Senator from Mississippi that the proposed joint committee should go into the question of the wisdom and the necessity, and so forth, of such fortification and make recommendations in regard to it?

At the last session we considered that matter, and we thought it was disposed of permanently; but it has crept into the Budget under another name. Would it be the idea of the Senator that the proposed joint committee would have jurisdiction and have the obligation and duty of investigating such questions as that?

Mr. HARRISON. My own opinion is that the joint committee, if the concurrent resolution should be adopted, should examine that question and make a study of it and try to ascertain, for embodiment in its recommendations, the amount which would be involved in this extraordinary increase for the Navy. I think the proposed joint committee ought to study the matter referred to by the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me, I should like to make a brief statement with reference to the suggestion of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]. The Senator from Idaho may have looked into the matter and may be advised about it, but I am not advised of any appropriation or estimate for the fortification of Guam. That matter has been discussed, as I understand from the press this week, before the legislative committee of the House, but not before the Appropriations Committee. Admiral Stark, appearing before the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House, where the determination of that question will lie, made a suggestion as to Guam. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts if any such proposal has been submitted to his committee? I am not advised as to whether or not it has been.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. My information is that the Budget asked for an appropriation for the dredging of the harbor at Guam. It asked for that appropriation under general authority to dredge and improve harbors that are accessible to naval bases and to land establishments, just as there is authority for the Committee on Appropriations to recommend an appropriation to dredge the entrance to the Boston Navy Yard or the Charleston Navy Yard.

The Navy Department asked for the appropriation as a dredging item under general authority to carry on such operations within a naval area or district, in this case the fourteenth or California naval district; and that question will be before the Committee on Appropriations.

Yesterday in the House committee, when Admiral Stark was present, the question was asked him as to what was the position of the Navy in reference to the dredging of the approach to Guam. He made the reply that the Navy favored it. But there is no legislation necessary to bring that about. The way to reach that issue, as I see it, is when the appropriations bill comes before the Senate, if that item is among those enumerated, to challenge the item and to have the Senate express itself regarding it.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts states correctly that there is no specific recommendation as to Guam contained in the Budget estimate; it was left out, but was incorporated or included in an estimate for a naval district.

Mr. WALSH. Exactly.

Mr. BORAH. So the question of whether the appropriation may be used for Guam is a matter to be determined by someone else than the Congress itself. The appropriation is for a general district. Last year there was a specific recommendation for the fortification of Guam. We had it before us and knew what it was. I am not complaining about that particularly. What I want to know is whether or not that matter will be considered by the proposed joint committee which is going to advise us in reference to national defense expenditures.

Mr. WALSH. The Committee on Naval Affairs has no such issue before it, and I assume the issue will be considered by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, there is no doubt about the accuracy of the statement of the Senator from Massachusetts. I was answering the Senator from Idaho only as to the larger program which has at times been suggested by the naval authorities concerning the fortification of Guam. When an item for dredging is presented to the Appropriations Committee, the Department is required to submit a breakdown of every dollar, stating the total, and showing exactly the purpose for which the money is to be used, and where it is to be used. I did not understand that the Senator was referring to a dredging item. However, the Appropriations Committee will present a breakdown showing exactly how much of the total sum is proposed to be apportioned by the Department for this object and submit its recommendation that the amount be granted or refused; and I think it would be refused if it were not desired to fortify Guam in compliance with the plans originally suggested by the Navy Department. I can assure the Senator that the question in which he is interested will be gone into by the Appropriations Committee on the dredging estimate.

Mr. BORAH. Then, am I to understand from the Senator's statement that his committee will determine whether or not there will be a fortification of Guam?

Mr. BYRNES. We will determine the only question submitted, and that is whether or not we should give a dollar for the dredging which is desired for Guam. That is the only question that will come to the committee. As the Senator from Idaho has said, if the Department asks for money for that purpose we can refuse it if we do not believe the work should be undertaken. We will present to the Senate all the arguments and the exact amount included in the total so that it can be refused or granted by action of the Senate; but we would not go into the question of constructing fortifications which are not asked for.

Mr. BORAH. But what if they are asked for?

Mr. BYRNES. If they are asked for, every detail will be required of the Department; they will have to make a showing to the committee, and the Senate will be advised of it, I can promise the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. WALSH. And a point of order could be raised against an item proposing the fortification of Guam?

Mr. BYRNES. In the absence of legislation, as I originally said, such an item would be subject to a point of order; that is the proposal which has heretofore been made about the fortification of Guam as differentiated from the dredging item. All information about the dredging item will be given to the Senate.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, if the Senator from Mississippi has concluded, I should like to take the floor to clear up some of the references made to the naval appropriations.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] desired to ask a question, and I yield first to him.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I desire possibly to ask several questions of the Senator from Mississippi. I am sure that he has noted the published statement that the leadership of the other House have announced a program of passing one of the annual appropriation bills each week for the next 14 weeks. I should like to know whether it is the idea of the Senator from Mississippi that that program, in the event of the adoption of the pending concurrent resolution, would be suspended?

Mr. HARRISON. There is nothing in the resolution that would suspend the action of the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. BANKHEAD. There is nothing in the resolution that would do that, but the resolution does not speak the whole story. Is it intended, then, that the proposed joint committee will make an argument that, if the pending resolution should be adopted, the usual course of action on the appropriation bills should be suspended pending the investigation by the committee?

Mr. HARRISON. I have made no request in the resolution—

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am not asking the Senator that; he is not answering my question; I know what is in the resolution.

Mr. HARRISON. I have not conferred with any Member of the other House, because when I was a Member of that body I shared to some extent and on some occasions the feeling over there against the Senate. So I want to get along well with the membership of the House and I want its Members to conduct matters as they desire to conduct them. I have no desire to interfere in any way.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Is it the Senator's idea, or will the argument be made with the consent of the Senator, that the Senate appropriations subcommittees, the Senate Appropriations Committee itself, and the Senate itself shall delay, suspend, or postpone action upon any of the appropriation bills to await the discussion and decision of the Senate on the report of the proposed joint committee?

Mr. HARRISON. I may say to the Senator that I doubt anything worth while being accomplished unless the membership that is appointed on the proposed joint committee, if the resolution shall be adopted, are enthusiastically in favor of trying to reach the object we have in mind. The deficiency bill is the first appropriation bill, as I understand, that is taken up at each session, and that bill will be before the Senate pretty soon, but as to the other general appropriation bills providing appropriations for the next fiscal year beginning July 1, I do not see any necessity to rush them forward until a study may be made by the Appropriations Committee and the members of the proposed joint committee.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does the Senator anticipate that the joint committee can get information which the subcommittees on the two appropriation bills cannot procure?

Mr. HARRISON. No; I do not.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Then, it will resolve itself down to a matter of opinion or judgment on the part of the members of the joint committee rather than the development of facts which are not otherwise available.

Mr. HARRISON. Of course, as the Senator knows, I have been very strongly in favor of retrenchment in Government expenditures. I think, as a whole, they have gone too high; and I should like to adopt any reasonable method that would create public sentiment, not only in the Congress but elsewhere, that might be of assistance to the Appropriations Committees in holding down some of these large increases. That is my general idea; but, in order to accomplish anything, I think there must be the closest cooperation between the respective chairmen and members of the Appropriations Committees and the special committee.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The statement of the Senator leads directly to one of the chief inquiries in my mind; and that is whether the sponsorship of this program intends to have the joint committee revise all of the new agencies that have been established under this administration with a view of deciding which ones should be abandoned or reduced in their scope of action; whether it is intended, as I said, to review the whole program, recommending the abandonment of an agency here or there—recommending, for instance, the abandonment of the social security program—or merely to recommend how much reduction shall be made in the appropriations for each of these agencies.

The only way to save money is either to abandon agencies or to reduce their activities. I think the Senator will agree to that statement.

Mr. HARRISON. I think that is a matter which the joint committee ought to study. Every effort should be made to arrive at a conclusion that might result in saving the Government money in certain instances that justify it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. How can that be done except by a review?

Mr. HARRISON. But I do not go to the extent of saying that the joint committee ought to recommend the abandonment of a number of agencies. The President has said that we can reduce to a certain amount the capital structure of some of the emergency corporations. I do not know whether or not that can be done. I think it would be the duty of the joint committee, working with the proper standing committee of the Senate and House, to see if that would injuriously affect those agencies in the fine work a great many of them are doing.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I believe the Senator will agree to the statement I am about to make. In any event, I will make the statement and ask him a question. There are only two ways to make substantial reductions. One is by reduction in the activities of the Government through reducing the number of agencies. The other is by reducing the amounts appropriated to the different agencies. Is it intended that the joint committee shall go into that subject, and review the whole program which the Appropriations Committee has jurisdiction to review, and make recommendations to the committee about where the reductions should be made?

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, let me ask why it should be assumed that the joint committee will reduce expenditures? It depends upon the composition of the committee. It is proposed that there shall be six members from the Appropriations Committee and six members from the Finance Committee. Suppose there should be appointed on the joint committee six members of the Appropriations Committee who never in their lives voted to reduce any expenditure but would give the Capitol away if somebody should ask for it. How could we reduce expenditures?

Mr. HARRISON. Well, of course, we shall run up against that question.

Mr. GLASS. We have run up against it now.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; we shall run up against it in the matter of the personnel of the committee; but I am sure that with the fine intellects there are in the House and in the Senate, the report and findings of the committee will be carefully analyzed. Possibly two reports will be submitted. We never know as to that; but committees generally know the background behind the views of individual Members.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I should like very briefly to clarify the situation in reference to naval defenses and our naval building program as I understand it to be.

The Committee on Naval Affairs is called upon to consider what additions or expansions should be authorized in our Naval Establishment in the way of additional combat vessels, in the way of additions to auxiliary vessels, and in the way of additions to our naval bases and yards and our naval aircraft. When we have passed on this question, and when Congress has approved and enacted naval authorization bills, the work of our committee is at an end and thereafter the question of providing annual installments of funds for new naval construction, for maintenance of naval establishments, and for a determination of the rate of construction and size of the establishments rests first with the Committee on Appropriations and finally with the Congress.

As I view the situation at this moment, the Naval Affairs Committee could adjourn and not hold a meeting at this session, in reference to how much money should be spent for the enlargement of our Navy by combat ships, by auxiliary ships, by aircraft, or by shore establishments. Of course, we shall have many bills presented to us for new shore establishments which have never yet been authorized by the committee. We shall have proposals made, perhaps, for further expansion of the Army and the Navy, but all we are now talking about in the way of naval national defense is entirely a question of appropriations. How much money will the Senate and the House spend on the Navy? The Appropriations Committees and the Congress alone will decide what is wise, where the expenditures should be made, and how far they should go.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I shall be happy to yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I wonder if I properly understood or interpreted the Senator's remarks. My understanding is that proposals will come before the committee of which the Senator from Massachusetts is chairman asking for large appropriations for larger battleships, and that that matter will not be before the Appropriations Committee until authority has been given under the bill which is before the Senator's committee.

Mr. WALSH. I am coming directly to a bill which is pending in the House seeking authority to enlarge the Navy beyond the authority already given. I am coming directly to that question, and also to the question of whether we should increase the size of our battleships from 45,000 tons upward.

In 1938, as Senators know, after the expiration of the treaty for the limitation of naval armaments on December 31, 1936, there was an abandonment of all existing international agreements to limit naval armaments. Our naval officials then properly and wisely said, "We ought now to fix a naval policy for the United States in view of the fact that there is now no hope of limitation by the principal powers of naval armaments, and in view of what is developing in the world." So in 1938 the Navy Department presented to Congress and to the Naval Affairs Committees of the House and Senate a program of expansion which they said was adequate and sufficient for that time. They not only did that, but they said last year that it was sufficient and satisfactory, and asked for no increase or expansion. That naval expansion program authorized the expenditure of approximately $1,200,000,000 on combat naval vessels, on auxiliary naval vessels, on some additional shore establishments, and on aircraft. That authorization is now the law.

Under that authorization the Budget Bureau at this session sends to the House and the Senate a request for certain appropriations. Whether or not those appropriations should be made from the general authorization already given the Navy is, I repeat, a matter solely to be decided in the first place by the Committees on Appropriations of the House and the Senate, and secondly by the House and the Senate themselves; so that there will be opportunity, I assume, to question every single item in the naval appropriation bill when it comes before the Senate.

There is pending in the House—not in the Senate—a bill proposing a further expansion and a further enlargement of the Navy beyond the 1938 expansion. The 1938 act provided for an expansion of about 20 percent in the number of vessels and 50 percent in aircraft. The bill now pending before the House requires an expansion of 25 percent more in the size of our Navy in vessels and 100 percent in aircraft. If that bill passes we shall be confronted with the necessity of determining from time to time how much we will appropriate to comply with the authorization of an expansion of approximately 45 percent in our Navy since 1938.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield on that point?

Mr. WALSH. I will.

Mr. LUCAS. Am I to understand that the President of the United States, in submitting the budget for national defense, added this 25-percent increase in amount?

Mr. WALSH. There is no item in the bill referred to dealing with that subject. The only items in the Budget, the only items that can be in it, are those which were authorized in the act of 1938 and prior authorizing acts.

There is already an authorization for the expansion of the Navy of approximately $1,200,000,000. We spent about $100,000,000 last year. We have still left about $1,000,000,000 of authorized naval strength from which appropriations can be made without a point of order being raised against them. The Appropriations Committee, when the naval officials appear before it, may ask, "How much do you want to build this year out of that authorization? What do you need most? Is it capital ships, is it auxiliary ships, or is it shore establishments?" Then we must determine how much we want to spend. Do we want to spend 10 percent in addition to the regular appropriations? Do we want to spend only 5 percent? Do we want to spend none, or do we want to spend it all, and appropriate the entire authorized billion dollars for a larger Navy? Those are all questions now properly before the Senate.

I now come to the bill pending in the House. I can speak only of my own impressions on that bill, not having heard the evidence which may be presented by the Navy Department or by other officials of our Government.

Naturally the Congress will inquire why there should be any further authorization for the expansion of the Navy before we expend what we have already authorized. With a large authorization at present to spend on the Navy, I should like to be informed why we should give another authorization until that money is spent, especially when the Budget for next year asks for only a relatively small percentage of the billion two hundred million that has already been authorized. What has happened in one year in the world to change the program of 1938, which all then believed was ample and sufficient as of that date and time to provide for a 20-percent naval expansion? Is it the idea that we are to go into war? Of course not. No one claims we are going into war. But it can be properly argued, perhaps, that the conditions in the world are such that the Navy which we authorized in 1938 may not be sufficiently large to meet the requirements at the end of the present world war, or to meet conditions which may then arise. I am not yet convinced that an additional authorizing program may be necessary. I will await, however, the views of the Navy. I am intensely interested in our national defense, especially in the Navy and desire to follow so far as possible the advice of our naval experts. But I hope we will not become panicky—and that is a good word; the President used it in his address—over national defense. I am anxious and desirous that we shall have a well-thought-out and constructive program for our Navy and its expansion, and particularly for the maintenance of a navy that will meet the 5-5-3 ratio, which in time of peace was determined to be the size of the Navy our country ought to have for its own protection and defense. In that ratio we are comparing the size of our Navy with that of England, with that of Japan.

There is an impression that we have gone too far with our naval and military defense. There is already ample authority for everything that is asked for in the Budget, and there is more left unexpended. To my mind the sole question, from the standpoint of national defense, so far as the enlargement and development of the Navy is concerned, is, Do we want to speed up, and how much can we speed up the building of the naval vessels which are necessary to approach the 5-5-3 ratio? Instead of the time for the completion of the program being 10 years, as the naval authorities asked in 1938, they might well say that now, because of world conditions, it should be 5 years or 7 years, if they can provide facilities, and there is some question whether they can or not. But, in my opinion, the chief and principal question, so far as naval defenses are concerned and so far as appropriations for this year are concerned, is entirely a question of whether we will modify the program for a 10-year expansion and speed up what we planned in 1938 as necessary for the ultimate size of our Navy to a matter of a few years.

I hope I have helped to clarify the situation, and I hope the Senate will keep in mind that it is one thing to present bills authorizing a further expansion of the Navy and another thing to appropriate the money for naval craft which has already been authorized.

I personally feel, in the absence of some information to the contrary, that the paper navy which we already have authorized should be made into a real navy. In other words, I think that the Navy for which we have already provided a billion dollars should be built and constructed and more money asked for, if necessary, than has been asked for in the Budget, in order that we may have an adequate navy for our safety and security.

I am pleased to have present the chairman of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations having charge of naval appropriations, who is most conscientious and most diligent in his handling of this serious problem, to join with me in saying that the sole issue before the Congress, so far as the Navy is concerned, is as to how much of what is already authorized for the various activities of the Navy we shall spend this year, what need there is, and what conditions exist in the world that should prompt us to speed up and act more quickly than we had in 1938 planned to do.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. I am in hearty accord with the Senator from Massachusetts and am very glad he has made his statement to the Senate.

I should like to refer to what was said with reference to the appropriation asked for the improvement of the harbor at Guam. The impression might be created that the Navy had submitted items for dredging which included an item for work at Guam which had not been contained in the Budget. Upon looking at the memorandum submitted by the Navy in support of the estimate I find that the Navy, in asking for the improvement of harbors and channels for the fourteenth naval district, provided a break-down of the $5,000,000, and set forth in detail the amount asked for dredging at Guam, giving the reasons why it was believed it should be done. So that there is no question about the issue being presented to the committee.

Mr. WALSH. There is no doubt about that. Last year the Navy Department presented to our committee a bill in which they sought authority to dredge and build a breakwater. A breakwater is an establishment, the same as building a new navy yard, or new way, or a new building, rather than merely repairing what exists. But there is general authority for dredging under existing law, so that, in my opinion, the wisdom of whether we should do that or not is a matter for the committee to decide; but I do not believe there is any additional authority necessary. It is a question of appropriating the money.

Mr. President, I believe that the safety and security of the country will be better assured by having our eyes open on the most remote part of our possessions to the west of this continent and on the most remote part to the east of our continent. I personally see no objection to appropriating money for dredging the harbor at Guam, which would give us an outlook so much farther west than any spot on our own continent. I see no objection to it at all, especially when Guam is one of our possessions, when aviators have to go there, and have to land in a harbor that is dangerous and unsuitable. I for one am not going to ask men who consecrate their lives and service to their country to go into the harbor at Guam in the condition in which it is, when $5,000,000 would make it possible to dredge it so that they could land in safety, so that we could have eyes with which to look about in time of danger in the Orient. I think we should also have eyes with which to look out into the Atlantic as far as possible. I think it is an important item of national defense. It is a great advantage to be able to see an approaching enemy hundreds or thousands of miles before he reaches the continent of the United States.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Am I to understand that the Navy Department is at this time asking anything different from what it sought a year ago, when this matter was considered by the Committee on Naval Affairs?

Mr. WALSH. No new bill is as yet before the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate, of which the distinguished Senator from Illinois and myself are members. But a naval expansion bill has been presented to the Naval Affairs Committee of the House, and hearings on it have been commenced. Navy officials yesterday appeared before the committee and recommended the enactment of this bill.

I do not want anyone to think I am not most loyal and devoted to the Navy; every Senator on this floor knows that I have always championed strong national defense, but I think it would be better not to confuse the public mind with another authorization bill for a 25-percent expansion in the Navy until we have completed the expansion already authorized. Let us completely build our paper navy into a real one before we have another piece of paper providing for another navy in the future. Let us appropriate now all that is necessary from what has already been authorized and if necessary plan for our future expansion.

Mr. LUCAS. I appreciate the force of the Senator's remarks. However, I should like to return for a moment to the island of Guam and clear up some confusion in my mind upon the question of procedure in the Congress on the proposed dredging of the harbor. As I understood, last year the question of dredging the harbor came up originally in a bill which was introduced in the House and later came to the Senate.

Mr. WALSH. That is true.

Mr. LUCAS. And which was then considered by the Senate Naval Committee.

Mr. WALSH. That is true.

Mr. LUCAS. Do I understand that there is another bill which has been introduced in the House, or does the item come through the Appropriations Committee this year?

Mr. WALSH. No bill has been introduced in the House mentioning the name "Guam" at all. But under general provisions of law the Appropriations Committee is permitted to recommend the appropriation of certain sums of money for naval establishments in particular naval districts. California and the Pacific Ocean islands are in the fourteenth naval district. Under the appropriations bill they have asked for money for dredging the harbor of Guam. As has been said by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], when the matter comes before the committee the items for that whole fourteenth district will be broken down, and the question will be as to what is to be done with this item and the other item, and the committee will have to pass on the wisdom of appropriating $5,000,000 for dredging the harbor of Guam.

Mr. LUCAS. But under the present procedure the Navy is asking for the same thing this year that was sought last year.

Mr. WALSH. Except the breakwater, as I understand.

Mr. LUCAS. But the Naval Affairs Committee of the House and the Naval Affairs Committee of the Senate will have no opportunity to study this matter?

Mr. WALSH. That is true.

Mr. LUCAS. Or call witnesses?

Mr. WALSH. That is true.

Mr. LUCAS. There will be no hearings?

Mr. WALSH. There will be no hearings.

Mr. LUCAS. It will be a matter left solely to the Appropriations Committee?

Mr. WALSH. Yes. The information which I have and which the Senator from Illinois and the Senator from South Carolina have is the result of reading newspaper accounts of what transpired in the Committee on Naval Affairs, when it inquired of the naval officers when they testified with respect to the proposed naval expenditures.

Mr. LUCAS. The question which I am turning over in my mind is why there has been a change in the procedure with respect to the spending of the $5,000,000 on the dredging of the harbor.

While I have the utmost respect for the ability and industry of the subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee which will handle this matter, yet I am constrained to suggest that this question is of sufficient importance to have the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House and the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate consider it. Without doubt it is the beginning of the ultimate fortification of the island of Guam at an expense to the taxpayers of $200,000,000 in line with the findings of the Hepburn report.

Mr. WALSH. I am glad to have the Senator's views, and I hope our committee will have an opportunity to discuss the matter informally and that we will have opportunity of making inquiries of the Navy Department.

It is true that the Hepburn report, to which the Senator refers, set forth the advantages of establishing an advanced fleet base at the island of Guam. But the immediate question before the Congress at the last session with respect thereto was whether to authorize construction of certain facilities there not in themselves fortifications but viewed by many Members of the Congress as looking toward the establishment of a naval base on the island. Congress refused this authorization.

Funds for the dredging of the harbor at Guam which are requested in the 1941 Budget may be voted or may be withheld, as the Congress decides, but, in my opinion, no new legislative authorization is requisite for such an appropriation.

With respect to the Senator's intimation that the dredging of this harbor, if Congress approved this item, may prove to be the first step in the fortification of Guam, we should not lose sight of the fact that nothing of that sort can come to pass unless and until some future Congress expressly authorizes it.

Mr. LUCAS. I think that is exactly what the Naval Affairs Committee should do upon this very important point. Small as the matter may seem at this moment, in my humble judgment, it is one of the most far-reaching items in the Budget looking to the future defense of the Pacific. That is why I say that the Senate committee, in view of the purpose for which it is constituted, should look into that question from the beginning, if in the future there is going to be a continuation of appropriations for the purpose of fortifying the island of Guam.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I am not out of harmony with the views expressed by the Senator, except that I want to say again that if this appropriation, as I view it now, is simply for dredging and making safe access and egress from a possession of my country, I shall vote for it.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. GERRY. I have been listening with a great deal of interest to the Senator's statement, and I take it that what he has in mind with respect to the new appropriation is how long it would take to complete any of those combat ships, if they were laid down now. It would run into years, would it not?

Mr. WALSH. It takes approximately 3 to 4 years to build a battleship alone.

Mr. GERRY. Exactly.

Mr. WALSH. I think it takes 2 years, approximately, to build a destroyer, and I assume it takes about 3 years to build a cruiser.

Mr. GERRY. Therefore it is difficult to consider appropriations for such construction as emergency appropriations. As a practical matter, the only thing we can do in connection with emergency needs, as I understand, is to expedite the construction which is already under way.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] that I concur in his viewpoint that the only opportunity the Senate will have to pass judgment upon the wisdom of the emergency appropriations for the operations of the neutrality patrol will be in the Committee on Appropriations and in the Senate.

There is only one other matter I need clear up, and that is the matter of the increased size of battleships. I do not think there will be any requests for authority to increase the size of battleships beyond 45,000 tons. The subject of an increase in the size of battleships is being studied and is being given a good deal of thought and attention in the Navy Department. I am not at liberty to say that it is inconceivable or that it is out of the question for any such request to be made, but up to the present time, at least, there has been no official action requesting it, nor do I think there is likely to be an immediate request in that direction.

I suppose the Senator has heard of the possibility of a 75,000-ton battleship. A battleship costs about $2,000 a ton. That would make the total cost of a 75,000-ton battleship about $150,000,000. With my limited knowledge of naval craft I think I should rather have two 45,000-ton battleships or three cruisers, or 10 or 15 destroyers, which could be built with the same amount of money.

With respect to the whole naval question I think we should move slowly. There is much to be done, but we ought to move slowly and cautiously, because, as the result of the war in Europe, we may learn more about the relative value of naval craft, the different kinds of naval aircraft than we now know. I think caution should be exercised in our naval defense planning for the future.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I not add that sound public credit is the first necessity for a successful national defense, and that we ought not to be entirely averse to leaving a few dollars in the Treasury?

Mr. WALSH. I am, of course, in full accord with the Senator in that respect, but I am going to take the liberty of expressing my views on that subject. There is a considerable amount of talk here and elsewhere about economy. There are only two ways of bringing about economy in city, State, or Federal Governments. One is by cutting expenses, the other is by increasing taxes, if we wish to balance the Budget. I am one of those who have not hesitated to say that, painful as it is, I believe our financial structure would be sounder today if we had increased taxes some years ago. I do not see how we can keep on postponing the inevitable day, regrettable as it is, of levying more taxes to meet increases in expenditures. I speak of that because I see great difficulty in making very material and substantial reductions in our appropriations; but, of course, a real effort should be made in that direction.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. KING. The Senator has alluded to the question of increased taxes. I shall be very glad if the Senator and others can point out the sources from which additional revenue may be obtained. I spent a considerable part of the last summer in exploring every avenue from which we might extract a few dollars, and I found none.

Mr. WALSH. Did the Senator vote for the La Follette amendment to the tax bill?

Mr. KING. I did not.

Mr. WALSH. I did.

Mr. KING. I think that would have given us only approximately $26,000,000 additional, which is an insignificant amount measured by the appropriations we are making for the present year.

Mr. WALSH. I understood the increase under the La Follette amendment would be considerably larger than that.

Mr. KING. I think not. In any event, how are we going to pay our bills except by increased taxes? Obviously it cannot be done. If we do not increase taxes we shall simply have increased deficits, and then inflation, with all the catastrophic results that would inevitably follow. There is only one way to get the means with which to pay our bills, and that is to increase taxes; but there is a point beyond which we cannot go in that respect; there is a point beyond which there will be diminishing returns. We are now levying a tax of 80 percent in the higher brackets, and the only way we can increase the amount of taxes is to raise the taxes placed upon the incomes of individuals and corporations; and the Senator knows that the taxes now are very oppressive.

Mr. WALSH. I think we should broaden the base and also increase our revenues by some tax plan, unfortunate and regrettable as it is.

Mr. KING. We could perhaps raise $25,000,000 to $40,000,000 by reducing what some have called the hump between $20,000 and $50,000 yearly incomes. We can raise perhaps $30,000,000 or $40,000,000; but in order to raise any considerable amount above that which we are now extracting from the people, which is $5,600,000,000, we must increase taxes to such an extent as would be almost unbearable. The Federal Government, States, counties, and cities are now taxing the people to the extent of 30 percent of their gross income. That is a burden which cannot long be continued without disastrous consequences.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I request that there be inserted in the RECORD in connection with my remarks a table prepared by the Navy Department.

This table shows that at the present time we have 79 combatant ships and 17 auxiliary vessels under construction; it shows that in the Budget for the fiscal year 1941 provision is made for commencing construction of 19 additional combatant ships and 5 additional auxiliaries, a total of 24; it shows that beyond that, in addition to ships already under construction, in addition to the ships already proposed to be started in the 1941 Budget, that there remains within the present authorized limits of naval strength 56 combatant ships and 8 auxiliaries, a total of 64, which as of now Congress, if it saw fit to do so, could appropriate for, and construction of which could be commenced without any additional authorization.

It is to be further noted that the authorized strength of the Navy under existing statutes fixes an age limit in each category of combatant vessels, and as a vessel reaches the age limit the Navy Department may proceed with the construction of a new ship to replace it without any additional legislative authority, conditioned always upon the appropriation of the funds by the Congress. Therefore when the new Congress meets a year hence to consider the naval appropriations for the fiscal year 1942 the number of new ships which it may then be lawful to commence will be not only the 64 shown in the table but as many more as shall in the meantime, by the operation of the age limit, have become obsolete.

For illustration: The table referred to shows 8 battleships now building, 2 more which it is proposed to start during the fiscal year 1941, and a remainder of 1 within the present authorized limit, which is 18 "underage" battleships; but, in fact, some of the battleships presently in commission are so rapidly approaching their age limits that it will be possible to commence several new battleships in the near future without the necessity of additional authorization. The same situation has application, within limits, to naval vessels in other categories.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the table presented by the Senator from Massachusetts will be printed in the RECORD.

The table is as follows:

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I should like to say a brief word in support of the concurrent resolution submitted by the learned Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON].

Since I came to the Senate last year nothing has struck me so forcibly as the fact that there is a complete lack of connection between appropriations and taxes. Every appropriation bill is considered by itself. Every proposal for expenditure is considered on the basis of whether or not it is a nice thing, and whether or not we would like to have it, and not on the question whether or not we have the money to pay for it. Every tax bill in recent years has been considered largely on the question of whether or not it is a desirable kind of tax for economic reasons, rather than whether or not we need the money.

The proposed committee—which, as I conceive it, would be a kind of planning committee—may not be able to affect affairs this year, but it could lay before Congress a plan by which we could balance the Budget over 1 year, 2 years, 3 years, or whatever period the committee thinks best. The proposed plan is something we must have if we are to act intelligently either on appropriations or on tax measures.

The proposed committee would do substantially what we have asked the President to do under the Budget. That particular function has not been performed. Today we have a Budget in which are recommended about $35,000,000 more expenditures than were recommended in last year's Budget. There is a reduction of about $675,000,000 from what is actually going to be spent in the present fiscal year; but there has not been the slightest suggestion of how we are to get back to a balanced Budget.

I could not set forth as eloquently as the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] has set forth, the absolute necessity of getting back to a balanced Budget. It seems to me that the proposed committee could present a plan to accomplish this object. I do not think it could go into all the details, but I think it could say, "If we are to hold our expenditures within our income, this is approximately how much the farm appropriation can be, and this is approximately how much the national defense appropriation can be." Then the committee would leave it to Congress to say whether or not it thinks that amount is sufficient. If Congress thinks it must increase farm expenditures, then the committee would say, "It is up to the Finance Committee to raise the additional money necessary for that purpose." The figure at which we should balance the Budget is an exceedingly important question, and I think we should have a recommendation from the proposed committee as to what the figure should be. But the thing that is absolutely essential is that the committee come in with a plan which relates taxes to appropriations, and which says, "If you exceed this certain figure, you must find a tax to provide the additional money." I do not see how the question can be considered in this body except through such a committee as is proposed.

I do not believe such a committee as is now projected has been necessary in the past, because I believe every past administration has assumed that the question of coordinating expenditures and taxes is an Executive function. We have imposed it on the President in the Budget law. We have asked him to do it, and every past President has tried to do it. It is only because the Executive has abandoned this function that we have to undertake it.

I agree with the learned Senator from Colorado that it is just as much our responsibility as it is that of the Executive, and yet it is something that it is much easier for the Executive to do than for us to do. Congress has a membership of 531, and it is difficult enough to get 531 Members of Congress to concentrate on one question at a time, without concentrating on an entire plan of expenditures and revenue. This function always has been performed by the Executive, and I doubt whether the proposed committee can do the kind of detailed budget making which is now done by the Budget Director.

Mr. President, I do not think the Executive is peculiarly interested in balancing the Budget. One particularly significant thing in the present Budget is that the Budget Director has actually increased his own budget from $480,000 in 1939 to $671,000 in 1940, and to $808,000 for the coming year. He is actually proposing that the personnel of the Budget Bureau be doubled in 2 years. Certainly when the Budget Director approaches the problem in that spirit, he cannot expect cooperation in economy from any other department.

It is rather interesting that the Office of Government Reports, the old National Emergency Council, is also increasing its budget this year from $830,000 to more than $1,000,000. The National Resources Planning Board, the third of the principal activities directly under the President, is also increasing its expenditures by more than 30 percent. Those are three of the largest percentage increases in the entire Budget, and they come directly from the Executive Office. Certainly it is fairly clear that those agencies are not interested in making a sincere effort to balance the Budget.

The learned Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] has said that his plan will not succeed unless it has the enthusiastic cooperation of the chairmen of the Appropriations and Finance Committees of the Senate and of the corresponding committees of the House. I agree, because after we inaugurate this plan it will be very difficult to persuade the Congress to adopt it unless we have the enthusiastic support of the leading Members of this body. Still more, I do not believe we can obtain adoption of the plan unless at the same time we have the enthusiastic support of the Executive and of the leaders of both party organizations in the Senate and House.

Mr. President, I believe we are taking a step in the right direction. I believe we are taking a step which is made necessary by the default of the Executive in his function; but I am still doubtful whether we can accomplish our aim unless every Member of the Senate—particularly the leading Members of the Senate—and the Executive himself are concerned that the plan shall be followed and worked out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 33) was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The President pro tempore, as in executive session, laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. BARKLEY. If there be no further business to be transacted, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock and 58 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until tomorrow, Thursday, January 11, 1940, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 10, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Blessed Christ, the Crucified One, who moves the spirits of men with His sacrifice and service, inspire us with these virtues that they may become the very woof of our thoughts and deeds. O Master of the ages, still speak to the starved hearts of men the perfect love that they need; break the barriers of intolerance, hate, and barren creeds. We beseech Thee to freshen our souls with Thy blessing and quicken our wills, that we may fulfill the duties and obligations which our country has laid upon us. Humbled and blind as we are, amid Thy manifold glories and mercies, O help us to find rest and gladness in the heavenly simplicity of our Lord and Saviour. In His holy Name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 6724. An act to provide for the prompt deportation of aliens engaging in espionage or sabotage, alien criminals, and other undesirable aliens.

The message also announced that the Vice President had appointed Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. GIBSON members of the joint select committee on the part of the Senate, as provided for in the act of February 16, 1889, as amended by the act of March 2, 1895, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the disposition of executive papers in the executive departments," for the disposition of useless papers in the following departments:

1. Department of Justice.
2. Department of the Treasury.

UN-AMERICAN PROPAGANDA ACTIVITIES IN THE UNITED STATES

Mr. JARMAN. Mr. Speaker, from the Committee on Printing I report back favorably (Rept. No. 1478) without amendment a privileged resolution (H. Res. 342), authorizing the printing of additional copies of House Report No. 1476, on the investigation of un-American activities and propaganda, and ask for its present consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 342

Resolved, That there be printed 35,000 additional copies of House Report No. 1476, current session, entitled "Investigation of Un-American Propaganda Activities in the United States," of which 5,000 copies shall be for the use of the Special Committee to Investigate Un-American Activities and 30,000 copies shall be for the House document room.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include therewith two brief statements from the Department of State concerning trade agreements with Argentina and Uruguay.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therewith an address delivered by Hon. BURTON K. WHEELER at the Jackson Day dinner at Denver, Colo., January 8, 1940.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Also, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include therein a resolution of the Billings Townsend Club, No. 1, of Billings, Mont.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a letter from the Secretary of State to Mr. William Green, and a reply thereto.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXHIBITION OF MINIATURES

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to call the attention of the House to the fact that the very noted Mexican painter of miniatures, Juan de Dios Hoyos, is exhibiting examples of his work in the Natural History Building of the United States National Museum, Tenth and Constitution Avenue, on the first floor, directly above the main entrance. The exhibition is open every evening until 4:30 p. m. Mr. de Hoyos has been prominent in inter-American conferences and has written a book on the subject advocating the friendship of the American republics. He is also noted as a maker of miniatures, and I ask unanimous consent to insert his letter in the RECORD, together with four excerpts from noted critics on the subject. Gentlemen who have seen miniatures will find something entirely new, in my judgment. The Members of Congress are invited, together with their secretaries and friends.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 6, 1940.

HON. KENT E. KELLER, M. C.,
Chairman of the Committee on the Library,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. KELLER: Your suggestion to invite the honorable Members of Congress to visit the exhibition at the United States National Museum at Smithsonian Institution to see miniature of my late mother was received by me with a deep sentiment of appreciation.

It will indeed be a great honor to have the Members of Congress visit my humble work. In order to accommodate their pleasure the exhibition will be extended a few days longer.

I hope that such manifestation will serve to a certain extent to foster more friendly relations between my country and the United States. In my purpose of lending a small part toward this mutual understanding, some years ago I wrote a program of suggestions to the various governments of the Western Hemisphere, many of which were later adopted at several of the Inter-American Conferences.

Thanking you in advance for your kindness in extending my invitation to the other Members of Congress, I remain, my dear Mr. KELLER,

Very sincerely yours,

JUAN DE D. HOYOS.

SOME OPINIONS ON THE WORK OF THE MEXICAN PAINTER, JUAN DE DIOS HOYOS, TO BE EXHIBITED AT THE NATIONAL COLLECTION OF FINE ARTS, UNITED STATES NATIONAL MUSEUM, WASHINGTON, D. C., DECEMBER 15-29, 1939

Joaquin Sorolla B.: "It is a very interesting work, the best I have seen in its class" (Seville, March 26, 1915).

Kees Vandogen: "Mr. Hoyos is the best miniaturist in the world" (Biarritz, September 20, 1919).

Rafael Cardona: "In my visits to the great picture galleries I have never been so spellbound as I was when I saw the miniature of Hoyos' mother, in which I observed the moist circulation of life under the almost maleficent illusion created by the artist's skill" (Mexico, August 19, 1935).

Glen Dillard Gunn: "When the miniature of Hoyos' mother is viewed under the microscope, a miracle takes place. The texture of the skin seems to change as in life, and the mind of the beholder instinctively rejects the intervention of the human agency that created it" (Washington, D. C., November 3, 1939).

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CROWE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include a list of the names of the States, the names of the Congressmen, and the names of the districts having forest-purchase units in them in the United States. I ask this for the benefit of Members who are interested. There are 93 Members of the House who have forest units in their districts, and I believe this will be of interest to all Members of the House. Further, I ask that these Members who are interested appear before the Subcommittee on Appropriations of which the Honorable CLARENCE CANNON, of Missouri, is chairman and present a statement concerning their interest in the purchase of these forest lands.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

GEN. DAVID L. STONE

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I have asked for time to address you today regarding one of the most able and distinguished men ever to wear the uniform of our great Army. This man has not attained his great measure of fame on the field of battle but on a broader and much more useful field.

January 10, 1940, is an important date to this Nation for the reason that Gen. David L. Stone leaves his command at Panama Canal Zone to assume his new duties in command of the Fifth Corps Area, Fort Hayes, Columbus, Ohio. The mere fact that a military officer is changing his command is not unusual, neither is it deserving of taking your time to recount. But General Stone is not an ordinary man and his career at the Canal Zone is one of the most brilliant in the history of our Army. In these uncertain and troubled times when the Panama Canal means so much to the life of our Nation and when the good will of our Central American neighbors is at its highest premium in history, it is well worth a few minutes of our time to pause and pay a fitting and well-earned tribute to General Stone's brilliant career in the service of his country.

I take a further pride in addressing you, briefly, of General Stone, for he once served as colonel at historic Jefferson Barracks in my own district not so many years ago.

Time will not permit me to cover even briefly all that General Stone has done in Panama, nor the efficient, quiet, and modest manner in which his duties have been discharged.

Upon the arrival of General Stone in Panama the relations between the Panamanian Government and people and our Army were none too cordial. The Panamanians judged all of our actions with suspicion and felt that they had to tolerate us because we were in a position to enforce our will. They were continuously looking for a chance to find fault or to create incidents, and in the past many occasions had been afforded them. The high officials of the Government were unknown or at best barely on speaking terms with the officers of our Army.

The press was exceedingly hostile. A few years previous the commanding general of our Army at the Canal Zone sued and obtained judgment against the editor of the Panama American, a powerful influence in Central America, and had him jailed. Thereafter all the papers were looking for a chance to get something on the Army and every little incident was played up to its fullest bounds. Such were the conditions when Gen. David L. Stone took up his command at Panama.

General Stone took in this situation at a glance and with his sympathetic personality, knowledge of human nature, his wisdom, and his intimate knowledge of civil affairs, straightened out the situation before he had finished the first year of his command. The editor of the Panama American, once our bitter editorial critic and antagonist, is now a sympathetic and useful friend.

General Stone made contacts with the president and all of the officials, high and low, of the Panamanian Government. He invited them into his home and discussed their family and other intimate problems with them. He acted not as a high and mighty official of an imperialistic United States, but as a friend and as a fellow Panamanian would. He pointed out how they could improve their methods of farming and fisheries; how they could develop their road system, their conditions of labor, and, above all, how they could benefit by cooperating with the United States; how they could live under the same roof with us and yet be close and intimate friends. He made them feel that they, too, were responsible for the safety of the Canal and that they would benefit by safeguarding it at all times. He won over the commandante of the national police who, at the beginning of General Stone's command, was viriely un-American. Today he is one of the general's closest friends.

General Stone cut the red tape between government officials and discussed matters informally in personal conference and even over the phone. Soon he found that they were seeking his advice on all matters of importance to the welfare of Panamanians. The president and his brother became close friends of the general and until the death of the president a short time ago, treated him as one of his own kinsmen. As the president lay on his bed suffering from an illness which took his life a few days ago, he ordered the secretary of state to sign a decree granting General Stone the thanks of the Panamanian Government and the decoration, the Cross of Balboa. Panamanians feel that no man has ever been so deserving of that decoration as General Stone, for he holds a place in the hearts of Latin Americans which has never been held by any other American.

Upon the death of the President not long ago a strong faction was plotting an uprising to prevent Dr. Boyd from assuming the Presidency to which he was entitled under the Panamanian Constitution. Dr. Boyd was hurrying to Panama by plane from the United States at the time, and conditions were ripe for serious trouble in Panama. Fortunately, the persons seeking to deprive Dr. Boyd of the Presidency decided to consult with General Stone. The general in his fine, quiet, and fatherly manner talked to them as a father would to a sick child. He told them that they and their constitutional government were on trial before the whole world; that their actions would show whether democracy in Central America was to live or die; that Dr. Boyd was the constitutional head of their government by their own preselection, and that if they took any steps to prevent him from assuming his rightful office or engaged in intimidation or bloodshed it would seriously blight the future of the Republic of Panama; that they had shown loyalty to their government and constitution; that their constitution provided for an orderly succession to the executive power and that if they took any other course they would throw the country into anarchy, shed the blood of their brothers, and give aid and comfort to alien systems of government which were not in accord with their ideals.

He told them that Dr. Boyd was a fine, modest, upright, and patriotic man and that he would carry on as President in accordance with the constitution and in the same manner as his illustrious predecessor. The general spent many hours with these hot-blooded Latins who had it in their power to throw the country into revolution. When he departed in the late hours of the night he had soothed their feelings and brought them around to his way and the right way of thinking. In plain words he prevented a revolution in Panama and restored good will all around.

The constitutional President arrived December 19, 1939, by plane and was met by the men who had plotted his death only 2 days before. They embraced him and assured him of their undying loyalty. These men who only a few hours earlier plotted revolution and bloodshed came to General Stone and told him that they did not know what Panama and Latin America would do upon his departure from the Canal Zone; that he was the only true friend they could turn to for advice based on sound judgment, wisdom, lofty ideals; and that only fine thinking, fine living, and love of his fellow men made it possible for General Stone to give such advice.

In the case of the Republic of Colombia, she has altered her historic foreign policy of suspicion, deeply rooted hatred and distrust of the United States, which had been her policy until General Stone won their love, affection, and admiration. Colombia had hated the Americans ever since they separated the Department of Panama from the home country.

When General Stone arrived in Panama he found that unfriendly Europeans were solidly entrenched in Colombia and that an important air line was owned by these Europeans and operated by reserve officers of this foreign power's Army. This was a direct threat to the Panama Canal and a menace to the safety of this Nation. It was a situation that could not be handled by the State Department and it was a situation that might easily turn out to the disadvantage of the United States if we attempted to put pressure on the Colombian Government. General Stone adopted a different tack. He invited high Colombian officials for social gatherings; took them into his family circle; treated them as fellow Americans; dined with them; conducted them through field exercises of our forces at the Canal Zone. In other words he made them feel like one of the family. They went back to Colombia singing the praises of the United States and in a short time invited the general to visit them in Colombia, which he did. Shortly after this the last member of a European military mission in Colombia was removed from power and an American Army mission substituted therefor. In other words, now the United States is a trusted partner of Colombia rather than a foreign oppressor. General Stone made the Colombians feel that they have an equity in the Canal and that with this equity they have an obligation and responsibility to assist in every manner to guarantee its security against all enemies. This they have done. In this alone General Stone has done more than any American diplomat or military man has been able to accomplish in 25 years. It is worth more than 100 bombers and 20,000 troops to the defense of the Canal.

At a recent reception held at the Colombian Embassy in Panama, a ranking officer of the Colombian Navy stated before the assembled diplomats that General Stone had made the Colombians and Panamanians love the United States, but what was greater, he made them love each other. No greater tribute has ever been paid to an American.

To show their great appreciation of General Stone they conferred upon him the Order of Boyaca, the first, I understand, that has ever been awarded to an American. The President of Colombia, the Ministers of Foreign Affairs and War have assured General Stone that no unfriendly act against the Panama Canal will ever originate from Colombian territory and this sentiment was ratified by the Congress of Colombia with only one dissenting vote, a Communist.

Costa Rica, just to the north of the Canal, is now a firm friend, but when General Stone arrived in Panama there was absolutely no contact with Costa Rica and there was a strong European influence. Today our officers are welcome visitors to Costa Rica and are received with every consideration and courtesy. Contrast that, if you will, with the situation 2 years ago, when Costa Rica protested that we were sending armed planes into that country when the only thing on the planes that even looked like armament was a fixed cylinder in which a machine gun might have been placed. No such sentiments are expressed today because General Stone went to that country, visited with the President and other officials of the Government. Today they are all firm friends of the United States.

General Stone has visited Nicaragua as the guest of the President. He has been entertained at state dinners there and has won the affection and admiration of the Nicaraguans. Today his name is known throughout the length and breadth of that land.

Guatemala, the Switzerland of Central America, has become a staunch friend of the United States. Previous to General Stone's assumption of command in Panama, Guatemala had never been visited by the supreme commander of our military forces as far as the memory of Guatemalans serve. It was used only as a convenient landing field between Panama and the United States. The general visited them with a large representation, reviewed their troops, visited their homes, toured their country, and was initiated as a member of their Volunteer Indian Corps, and, in fact, the secretary of war, a fine old gentleman of 82 years of age, presented him with his own personal uniform as a token of esteem.

Through the general's good-will tours and sincere interest in the welfare of the Guatemalans he has been offered free use of all landing fields and storage for our Army planes and every cooperation has been extended to our armed forces. I do not think there is much more that can be said about Guatemala and the genuine love and affection it has for the United States due to the efforts of General Stone.

I can only cover here a minor part of General Stone's accomplishments. As regards the Panama Canal, he has been a tireless missionary, awakening the people of the United States to the vital importance of the Canal. He has planned for and developed its defenses and has taken over the duties of Governor General of the Canal Zone during the most delicate period, when policies had to be initiated and immediate plans had to be made for protecting the locks and other vital installations made against acts of sabotage. He has planned and carried forward a huge construction program under almost insurmountable difficulties and has placed under roof an immense increase in Army personnel which has arrived within the last 2 months, with little or no prior notice. Above all, he has won the love, respect, and admiration of the entire ranks.

As regards the troops, General Stone's well-known consideration for their comfort, welfare, and happiness is appreciated by every enlisted man there. The efficiency of his command was commented upon by a recent congressional delegation, consisting of Members of the House and Senate, who said in a press interview that these soldiers at the Canal Zone were the most outstanding men they had seen in their inspections of United States Army installations. These qualities which have made General Stone an outstanding officer are well known throughout the entire military service of our country.

The achievements of General Stone in the diplomatic field have been attained by peaceful methods predicated upon trust, good will, judgment, tireless effort, and thorough understanding of the Latin American temperament. This has won for him the love, respect, admiration, and cooperation of all our Latin American neighbors. Today the Canal is safe with our friends helping us watch. What General Stone's departure will mean in the future of these relationships only time will tell.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include quotations from Washington's papers.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.
There was no objection.

NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute, and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

IT TAKES 2 YEARS 8 MONTHS 27 DAYS TO ESTABLISH SUPREMACY OF UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, on page 12 of the committee's report to the Senate on the bill which became the National Labor Relations Act, made on the 1st day of May 1935, under the subtitle, "Duty to Bargain Collectively," we find this statement:

The committee wishes to dispel any possible false impression that this bill is designed to compel the making of agreements or to permit governmental supervision of their terms. It must be stressed that the duty to bargain collectively does not carry with it the duty to reach an agreement, because the essence of collective bargaining is that either party shall be free to decide whether proposals made to it are satisfactory.

November 2, 1935, in a letter to the Sun of New York, Senator ROBERT F. WAGNER, author of the bill, referring to the act, made this statement:

The law does not require any employer to sign any agreement of any kind. Congress has no power to impose such a requirement.

April 12, 1937, Chief Justice Hughes, handing down the unanimous decision of the Supreme Court in the Jones & Laughlin Steel Corporation case, referring to the act, said:

The act does not compel agreements between employers and employees. It does not compel any agreement whatever.

Notwithstanding the fact that the Senate committee reporting this bill for the consideration of the Senate; that the author of the act; that the Supreme Court of the United States, each had declared that the act did not require the making of any agreement—much less the signing of a written agreement—by the employer, Nathan Witt, then and now the secretary of the board, on the 2d day of June 1937 conferred with Philip Murray, vice president of the C. I. O., chairman of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, and with Lee Pressman, general counsel for the C. I. O., about a strike which the C. I. O. intended to call, but had not yet called, against Inland Steel.

On the next day, this same Witt, disregarding the report of the Senate committee, the statement of Senator WAGNER, the decision of the United States Supreme Court, in a memorandum to Charles Fahy, general counsel of the N. L. R. B., advised him that, after talking with Murray and Pressman, the principal thing in which the C. I. O. affiliate was interested, was—

A quick decision from the Board as to whether or not a written agreement is required after the parties come to an understanding after negotiations.

Witt then wrote:

I suggested that the quickest way of getting a decision is for S. W. O. C. to modify its approach on the majority question. * * * At the same time, it could ask for negotiations looking toward a written agreement. All other things being equal, Inland would probably refuse the request on the ground that collective bargaining does not require a written agreement, even if the parties come to an understanding on the provisions—as they apparently have in this case on the basis of the Carnegie-Illinois agreement. If at the same time as it makes the demand, S. W. O. C. also offers to prove to Inland before the conference that it represents a majority, then Inland's refusal to negotiate on such a basis would lead to a claim by S. W. O. C. that section 8 (5) had been violated.

After checking on this with Mr. Edwin Smith, I left the problem with Murray and Pressman. They have been in touch with Bittner, the S. W. O. C. director in Chicago, and he is checking his books to see whether they are in shape for presentation to the company. If they are, S. W. O. C. will make a demand on Inland in the above terms and, upon refusal, will file a charge.

Note these outstanding facts: The Senate committee, the author of the bill, the United States Supreme Court had all held that an employer, under the act, was not required to sign a written contract. That is statement 1.

Witt, secretary of the Board, and the Board knew on the 2d day of June 1937 that Inland Steel was not required to sign a written contract. Yet the Board's representative and secretary, Witt, advised the Board's general counsel that C. I. O., its vice president, and its general counsel wanted a written contract with Inland; that if a demand for a written contract was made Inland would probably refuse and, upon a refusal, which was expected, S. W. O. C. would file a charge with the Board.

Here we find the secretary of the Board, with the knowledge of the Board's general counsel and with the actual knowledge of at least one member of the Board, doing what he could to bring about and foster a strike.

Authority for the statement which has just been made will be found in a memorandum made by Witt himself, testified to by him before your special committee—pages 282–283 of volume 1, No. 8, of the hearings, December 19, 1939.

The demand for a written contract was made. It was refused. The C. I. O. affiliate made a complaint to the Board, and the Board, notwithstanding the decision of the United States Supreme Court, decided that Inland, in refusing the C. I. O.'s demands, was guilty of an unfair labor practice and issued a complaint against the company on June 12, 1937.

Yesterday, 2 years 7 months and 7 days after Witt had conspired with Murray, Pressman, and Edwin Smith to make this unlawful demand upon Inland, the Circuit Court of Appeals at Chicago overruled the decision of the Board and held, as the Supreme Court had held 2 years 8 months and 27 days before; as Senator WAGNER had written in November of 1935; as the Senate committee had reported in May of the same year that an employer could not be required to sign a written contract.

In the Inland case there was no complaint that the company refused to bargain or was unfair in its wages, hours, or working conditions. The union's complaint was upon the point that the company refused to put into a written contract with the C. I. O. its labor standards.

Of the trial examiner's report, the Court said:

His purpose was deliberately to discredit the testimony of petitioner's witnesses concerning an important record, while, at the same time, refraining from saying or doing anything to disparage witnesses who had given testimony of a dubious nature concerning a record regarded as important in support of the Board's case.

While we sit here in Congress, this wrecker of businesses; this creator of unemployment; this conspiring, arrogant National Labor Relations Board, which has assumed to itself powers never given it by Congress, which refuses to abide by a decision of the United States Supreme Court, continues from day to day its denial of the right of collective bargaining to employees; its vexatious litigation; its underhanded, un-American, illicit partnership with C. I. O., the object of which is to establish a monopoly over labor, levy and collect tribute from the workers, and the continuance in power of those parasites who are now holding high official positions and living upon the earnings of the workers they enslave.

What more does this House need to induce it to abolish the Board?

RECOMMENDATIONS OF SECRETARY OF THE NAVY

Mr. HARNESS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARNESS. Mr. Speaker, the shocking and amazing proposal of our new Secretary of the Navy, requesting of this Congress more than a billion dollars for the expansion of the Navy and unprecedented emergency peacetime powers for the President of the United States, authorizing the conscription of industry and transportation of this country, has startled the people. Here is another ranking lieutenant of the New Deal who has lost no time in justifying his appointment, in demonstrating the fact that the President remains consistent at least in his picking of bungling and inept administrators.

Charles Edison had barely settled himself in his new office as Secretary of the Navy when he startled the country with his proposal to conscript American industry in peacetime emergencies. Of course, an emergency is anything you want to make it. Even now we have what the President is pleased to define as a "limited" national emergency, whatever that means. Looking back over the past 7 years, in fact, I do not recall a time during the New Deal when some sort of an emergency has not existed. The New Deal has literally been a continuous string of emergencies.

Businessmen throughout the country, recalling how Mr. Roosevelt has revelled in emergency, naturally suffered nervous chills when they heard the new Cabinet member's brash proposal.

No clear explanation has been given by the Secretary of the Navy of the causes which prompted the suggestion. Maybe it was because the naval program has not been moving with the efficiency, precision, and dispatch that should be expected. Maybe Mr. Edison thinks that if he had complete dictatorial authority over the industries supplying the Navy he could iron out the delays and errors which have beset the Department under his administration.

American businessmen do not agree with him, for the most obvious reasons. Everyone realizes that too much authority has already accumulated in the Presidency; that this country ceases to be a free state and becomes a dictatorship the minute we enter another war. That is enough for most Americans.

So long as we are at peace, at least, we certainly intend to resist any further encroachment of Executive authority upon the American economic system.

In justice to Mr. Edison, we should not fail to recognize his apparent readiness to withdraw the proposal. When the storm of protest forced him to a realization of the enormity of his proposal he was quick to admit the possibility of error. That scarcely explains the total thoughtlessness and carelessness which permitted him to make it in the first place. It is hardly reassuring to the country to realize that Cabinet members and Department heads so easily fall into the most palpable errors.

The incident is a sad reflection on the character of an administration which does lip service to national unity and acts continually to confuse, confound, and alarm the people in a manner which makes unity impossible.

Thank goodness, the New Deal string has just about run out. If there is no immediate hope for harmony and confidence in the present year, it ought at least to be encouraging to the country at large to look forward to the strong possibility of better things a year from now. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the Record on the continuance of the Dies committee.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

By unanimous consent permission to revise and extend their own remarks was granted to Mr. SHAFER of Michigan, Mr. FISH, Mr. VOORHIS of California, and Mr. BENDER.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include a statement made by the Commissioner of Agriculture of the State of Vermont, with an accompanying excerpt from an article appearing in the Fortune Magazine.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the Record and include therein a short editorial appearing in the Baltimore Sun of this date.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

COMMISSION TO STUDY NATIONAL DEFENSE RESOURCES AND REQUIREMENTS OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

[Mr. VAN ZANDT addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix of the Record.]

GENERAL LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their own remarks upon the pending bill (H. R. 801), and that all who have spoken in the debate may revise and extend their own remarks at the point in the Record at which they spoke, during the next 5 legislative days.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

ANTILYNCHING BILL

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 801) to assure to persons within the jurisdiction of every State due process of law and equal protection of the laws, and to prevent the crime of lynching.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 801, with Mr. McCORMACK in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. GAVAGAN] has consumed 57 minutes and has 33 minutes remaining. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] has consumed 2 hours and 24 minutes and has 36 minutes remaining. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] has consumed 1 hour and 15 minutes and has 15 minutes remaining.

Mr. FISH. May I inquire of my colleagues how many speakers they have left? We only have one speaker remaining on our side. How many have you?

Mr. GAVAGAN. So far as I am concerned, we have only one—myself.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. JARMAN].

Mr. JARMAN. Mr. Chairman, I entertain no doubt whatever that every Member of this body as well as every right-thinking person in the United States is of one mind relative to the horrible crime of lynching, which this legislation purports to attempt to eradicate.

We of the South yield to no one, and certainly not to the advocates of this legislation and the other citizens of New York, Chicago, and similar machine or gang-ridden cities, who have no knowledge whatever of the real situation which confronts us, in our antipathy for lynching and our earnest desire that the progress which has already occurred toward stamping it out continue until the goal shall have been reached. Certainly, not even the proponents of this legislation would accuse us of condoning this terrible crime.

It is my privilege, pleasure, and honor to hale from the Black Belt of Alabama, than which there is no finer country in the world; than the people of which section there are no better citizens, no more patriotic citizens, no more peace-loving and law-abiding citizens. Not only is the soil black and rich, but it is the habitat of the black man, who seems to have followed this black, cotton-producing land. Before the Great War there were five Negroes to one white person in my county. The ratio is probably not quite so large now. Whatever it was then and is now, it prevails in four counties of my district and in the entire Black Belt of those Southern States. Does this mean anything to you gentlemen from New York and Chicago, where the Negro population is so comparatively small? It must mean much to us, as it has since you placed the black man's heel on our forefathers' necks during reconstruction, and as it ever will.

In this beautiful land are the best real friends the Negro ever had. Having been nursed by a Negro mammy, having played with more Negro children than white ones, having been literally reared among them, we of the Black Belt know the colored man and highly respect him in his place. It is but natural, I think, for us to insist that he remain in his place and that there be no social equality. While we do not invite him to our homes as an equal, do not dine with him or ride in the same railroad coach, there is no group of white people in the world who have exerted, and will continue to exert, more effort toward caring for these citizens we consider our wards. Though not accepting them as equals, the Southerner will fight another white man to preserve the rights of one of them, which citizens of other sections, who regard them so different socially, naturally will not do.

To illustrate the way in which we live together, I must beg your pardon for indulging in several personal references. I live in a town of approximately 1,000 people. About a month after the declaration of war in 1917, three of us left that town for the first officers' training camp together. War was new to everyone and it was thought that we would be in France within a few months and would probably be dead shortly thereafter. Consequently the town literally turned out to bid us adieu. I kissed my dear mother good-bye, said farewell to my father, my sister, my brother, to all of whom I was very devoted, to most of the friends of my childhood, and to the young lady of whom I was fondest at the time. I experienced no difficulty whatever in doing this. When they accompanied me, however, to the Pullman door, where stood with my suitcase an old Negro with whom I had worked long hours, day and night, during rain, sleet, and sunshine in caring for a herd of purebred cattle belonging to my father; when old Isreal Hill said, as he handed me my suit case, "fore God, Mister Pete, I sho does hate to see you go," it was an entirely different story. I had to board the Pullman very hurriedly, in a futile effort to hide the tears which rapidly trickled down my cheeks. At about the same time old Florrie was ably serving my family as cook. Both Isreal and Florrie still live in my town and there is no one I am happier to see than either of them when I return home. I always look them up, if they do not contact me, that I might at least say "hello."

Can anyone be so cruel, so thoughtless, so inhuman as to believe that we of the South entertain an attitude of mob violence toward such people as Florrie and Isreal and their children? I do not believe that even the author of this legislation would make that charge. On the other hand, we abhor lynching just as you do, and regret it sincerely when a situation arises which produces it. The average southern Governor and sheriff will and does, when the necessity arises, exert more effort to prevent a lynching than any other crime in the statutes. Again I speak from experience. I have been active in the National Guard of Alabama since 1922. Some years ago the adjutant general called me and said, "Colonel JARMAN, you have many friends in Eufaula, and your civilian occupation qualifies you to ascertain facts. The same is true of Colonel Jackson. I want you both to go to Eufaula as soon as possible, arriving not later than tonight, on duty but in civilian clothes so that the people may not be aware of your mission. You know that Negro will be tried there tomorrow. He will be carried from here on a special train accompanied by a large detachment of guardsmen under the command of General Bare. They will reach Eufaula at approximately 10 o'clock. In the meantime I want you and Colonel Jackson to casually contact as many of your friends in Eufaula as possible; listen to conversations in hotel lobbies and drug stores; inquire about the situation of Captain Schneider, who is already there with his company; and report the prospects of an attempt at lynching, if any, to General Bare upon his arrival tomorrow." Immediately proceeding to Eufaula I was happy indeed to be unable to detect any great danger of a lynching, despite the uncertainty which naturally exists when such a crime has been committed. I shall never forget the arrival of that train the following morning with two soldiers with fixed bayonets in every vestibule and one by every window. I can see them now as they detrained and formed a hollow square with the prisoner and General Bare and his staff in the center and proceeded to the courthouse, around which a strong guard, including numerous machine guns, had previously been established by Captain Schneider. Nor shall I ever forget my first entrance into a courtroom at the door of which every person was carefully searched for weapons and in every window and corner of which stood a soldier with fixed bayonet. There was no untoward event whatever. The prisoner was duly tried, regularly convicted, and returned to the State penitentiary for his electrocution on the same train and under the protection of the same guard which brought him down.

It cost Alabama thousands of dollars to protect that man, guilty of the most heinous of crimes, but he was protected. It has been the attitude of our recent Governors to afford such protection, and I feel sure that the same is true of those of other Southern States. Consequently, and because of the active interest of all concerned, the crime of lynching has all but disappeared from the front pages of the newspapers of the South, and, if you will permit us to continue to solve our own problem without Federal interference brought on by you gentlemen who know nothing about it; if you will refrain from insulting us by the passage of such legislation as this and from saying "You deserve no credit for the practical obliteration of lynching and we will give you none, but will take your problem into our own hands, thereby shifting the responsibility from your shoulders to those of the Federal Government"; if you so conduct yourselves the day is not far distant when if no one is lynched in other sections of the country there will be no lynchings. I do not refer to gangster assassinations, which are not covered by this legislation and which, if history repeats itself, you will not permit the inclusion of by amendment. While I cannot be too optimistic, I sincerely hope that you may find equal success in eliminating this crime on your sidewalks and on the doorsteps of your courthouses and city halls.

Though time does not permit me to dwell on many of the efforts, organized and otherwise, which have been indulged in by people of the South to prevent lynching, I do wish to refer to that organization of patriotic southern women who compose the Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching. This organization was born a few years ago at a meeting of just a few ladies. It has grown to such an extent, in numbers as well as in activity, that it has, I believe, become the most potent factor in the prevention of lynching. I have a letter from the executive director of this association, dated December 29, 1939, which transmits to me with pride the report of Dr. Patterson, president of Tuskegee Institute, stating that only 3 lynchings occurred in the United States last year. This report contrasts the number with 6 in 1938, 8 in 1937, 8 in 1936, and 20 in 1935, a reduction in the number of this terrible crime from 20 to 3 in 5 years, toward which result I am sure that the work of these good southern women, in pledging the best efforts of peace officers toward the prevention of lynching; in personally and through influential constituents, placing pressure upon these officers; by immediately, upon receipt of information of the commission of a heinous crime, personally interceding with the officers, and with mobs, if necessary, has very materially contributed. A reduction of from 20 to 3 in 5 years by our own people, and yet you insist—for political advantage, I believe, rather than because of any humanitarian ideals—that the Federal Government now take over the performance of this our well-performed duty. Does any fair-minded man think such action would tend toward further decreasing lynching? I must not forget to add that this letter from this ladies' association for the prevention of lynching, although written just a few days before the convening of the Congress which had this nefarious bill as its first order of business, did not solicit my support of it; it did not even mention it, nor has this association ever endorsed antilynching legislation.

As you know, antilynching bills are not new but are generally proposed every 2 years, very largely, I am afraid, for the purpose of currying favor with Negro voters. As those of you who were here then know, one was passed 2 years ago under the same sponsorship as is enjoyed by this one. Relative to this bill, the New York Herald Tribune of May 4, 1937, said:

Of course, we ought to have laws to protect people against mob violence; but the Gavagan bill will not do it, because it is too narrow; it doesn't begin to work until the victim is first in charge of a peace officer, and peace officers, being duly mindful of their own safety, the disagreeable feeling of contusions, bruises, and other wounds, and the advisability of standing in with the boys if they want to hold their jobs, are proverbially scarce and hard to find when a mob is on the rampage. * * *

The Gavagan bill would be an added incentive for the peace officer to keep away from the mob and their prisoner; as long as he kept away, the bill wouldn't touch either the officer or the mob, but if he tried to take the prisoner away and protect him from mob violence and failed, then, but then only, would the law apply to both the officer and the mob.

The 1937 bill was a joke indeed. Not only did it encourage sheriffs to permit the mob to beat them to a crime but its sponsors refused to permit its amendment to include gang lynchings, as they will probably do again, just as this bill specifically excludes certain types of violence.

While this bill was under consideration, a Negro forced himself into the back seat of a car which was being driven by one of the finest, sweetest, most charming ladies in my district, the wife of a very highly regarded and prominent official, and a relative of a Member of this body. Fortunately she succeeded in driving under an electric light and frightening him away. Shortly after his arrest, the atmosphere became very tense and her husband talked the gathering mob into disbursing by telling them their representatives stood that day in the Halls of Congress, with their backs against the wall fighting desperately to prevent enactment of antilynching legislation. He told them, "If you lynch this man you will greatly weaken the fine fight those gentlemen are putting up," and mob violence did not occur. Could he have made such an argument had this legislation been in effect?

Its author has diligently attempted to remove from the present bill the provisions which would prevent the penalty from becoming effective until the arrest of the criminal by the peace officer. I do not believe, however, that he has succeeded in doing so. Let us read section 3—

Whenever a lynching occurs any officer or employee of a State or any governmental subdivision thereof who is charged with the duty, or possesses the authority to protect such person or persons from lynching, and neglects or refuses to make all diligent efforts to protect such person or persons from lynching.

I repeat—

who is charged with the duty or possesses the authority to protect such person from lynching.

My county is 75 miles long. Can it be said that the sheriff, being at the courthouse when the crime is committed, is charged with the duty or possesses the authority, or the ability for that matter, to protect a criminal who commits a crime 40 miles away in a section where he has no deputy until he, either personally or by deputy, has had time to arrest the criminal or at least to reach the neighborhood in which he is? How can he be charged with the duty or possess the authority or ability to protect this man when he is 40 or 30 or 20 or 10 miles away. The proponents of this legislation will probably answer that he is not charged with this duty and does not possess this authority until he has had a reasonable time to reach the scene of the crime and has refused "to make all diligent efforts" to do so. Now I ask you, with this law in force what would it be natural for a sheriff to do upon learning that a heinous crime has been committed 40 miles away in a section in which both the crime and the section naturally cause him to fear a lynching? We will say that he has just received a most important call to the other end of the county.

He feels that it is his duty to answer this call and knows that if he does so he will be in no danger of prosecution. Whereas if he fails to perform this duty and hastens to the scene of this heinous crime in a sincere effort to prevent a lynching, succeeds in arresting the criminal but is unable to hold him against the mob, he knows that he will at least be subject to arrest by a United States marshal and that he will be in grave danger of conviction of a felony and the imposition of a sentence of 5 years' imprisonment and a $5,000 fine. Not only that but the county he loves, the people who have probably kept him in office for years, who are honorable, law-abiding people and who have had nothing whatever to do with this crime or with the lynching, will be subject to a penalty of $10,000 as compensation to the relatives of the deceased criminal. Furthermore, should he decide to answer the first call and request a citizen of the section in which the heinous crime was committed, who has no connection whatever with the enforcement of the law, to arrest and hold the criminal for him, and should this citizen "refuse to use all diligence and powers invested in him for the protection of the person" by the sheriff, then the innocent law-abiding citizens of the county would be subject to that $10,000 penalty. What would it be natural for the sheriff to do under those circumstances, and would his natural conclusion tend to decrease or increase the number of three lynchings which occurred in the United States last year? Let us illustrate again. This law is in effect and the sheriff is aware of the penalty to him and to his county for his failure to prevent mob violence after his arrest of the criminal. In the situation just mentioned he elects to hasten to the scene of the crime. Could he be reasonably expected to risk his life, as he doubtless would do today without this law, by driving at a speed of 60 or 70 miles an hour over rough road, or would it not be more natural for him to "make all diligent efforts to protect such person" by speeding to the scene at the rate of 40 or 50 miles an hour? The difference in the elapsed time might be sufficient for the mob to get there first. Or suppose he started out at 70 miles an hour and had a puncture but was not killed; could he be expected to proceed on a flat tire as best he could, or to change tires with all possible speed; or would it not be more natural, under the ridiculous circumstances which would confront him by this law, for him to proceed leisurely in changing his tire, be unable to find a jack, or have to telephone to the nearest garage?

Any of these methods would qualify him as "making all diligent efforts" and prevent the possibility of his, and his county, being fined, which would result from the other alternative. I have thus far assumed the sheriff to be an honorable, law-abiding, duty-performing gentleman, as most sheriffs in Alabama are. If such men could naturally be expected to pursue the courses mentioned, what of the corrupt, criminally minded peace officer, such as I have read of in certain large cities of our country being dominated by and affiliated with racketeers and gangsters, of which we in the South know nothing?

If my construction of this section be correct, it is certainly not an antilynching bill but a lynching-production bill, and I cannot too strongly urge you gentlemen not to force it down the throat of an unwilling South, a South which is unwilling to see the return of the day of 20, 40, 100 lynchings a year, a South which instead hopes very earnestly to be permitted to handle its own problems in its own way with which it has so far been so successful, a South which is anxious, and which will succeed in doing so if not interfered with by you gentlemen from other sections, to reduce the 3 lynchings of 1939 to none in 1940 and to continue the number at this vanished point. Whether we do so or not, my colleagues, lies within your hands. In the name of the unfortunate victims of mob law—past, present, and future—I say, "God forbid that you prove unworthy of the trust so imposed in you." [Applause.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I have yielded myself the balance of my time, 15 minutes, unless there are some Republicans here who desire some of the time. In view of the fact that there is none, I will consume the 15 minutes that are left.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for 3 minutes out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, a number of Members on this side have received letters asking what action the Congress has taken with reference to the continuation of the Dies committee or when the Rules Committee intends to have a hearing for the purpose of continuing the Dies investigation of un-American activities.

Yesterday the chairman of the Rules Committee, Mr. SABATH, gave out a statement. He is reported in the press as having said after a conference with President Roosevelt that he felt further appropriations for the Dies committee would be money thrown away. I do not know whether this reflects the views of the President or not, but it is well known that President Roosevelt dislikes the action of the Dies committee in exposing the numerous fellow travelers appointed by the administration and probably would be highly gratified with its sudden death. The Rules Committee, however, will determine this issue without dictation from the White House, the American Youth Congress, the Communists, or the German Bund.

The Dies committee has done a good job in exposing both Communist and Nazi activities in this country, and 75 percent of the American people in popular polls have asked for the continuance of this Committee to Investigate Un-American Activities, likewise foreign propaganda in the United States which for the time being is the most dangerous.

I am confident that as soon as Chairman DIES returns to Washington the early part of next week there will be a meeting of the Committee on Rules, and the continuation of the Dies committee will be approved by almost unanimous vote. Speaking as the ranking Republican or minority member of the Committee on Rules, I would prefer not to have a meeting of the committee called until the two Republican vacancies are filled, which should be done by next week. A delay of a few days will make little or no difference.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. GAVAGAN. I have been requested by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations who was unavoidably prevented from getting here at the opening of the session today, to have the Committee rise in order that he could present a privileged report. Should I move that the Committee do now rise for this purpose, may it be done without in any way prejudicing the right of the gentleman from New York to the floor when the Committee resumes its sitting?

The CHAIRMAN. It may. When the Committee resumes its sitting the Chair will recognize the gentleman from New York, because the gentleman from New York yields time to himself of which time he has control.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. McCORMACK, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 801, had come to no resolution thereon.

EMERGENCY SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATION BILL, 1940

Mr. TAYLOR, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the following bill (H. R. 7805) making supplemental appropriations for the Military and Naval Establishments, Coast Guard, and Federal Bureau of Investigation, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes (Report No. 1479), which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and ordered printed.

Mr. TABER reserved all points of order against the bill.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. St. Claire, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed a concurrent resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. Con. Res. 33. Concurrent resolution establishing a joint congressional committee to make a full and complete study and analysis of the Budget for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and the accompanying message of the President.

ANTILYNCHING BILL

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 801) to assure to persons within the jurisdiction of every State due process of law and equal protection of the laws, and to prevent the crime of lynching.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 801, with Mr. McCORMACK in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] is recognized.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I commend the Members of the House for the high plane upon which the discussion of the antilynching bill has been conducted up to now. There has been no rancor, no personalities, no abuse on either side, and there is no reason for it whatever. There is a difference of opinion, a difference of sentiment, particularly in the South, as opposed to the West and the North. We all recognize this, and the debate up to now has been conducted on this basis, and I hope will continue until the bill is passed.

The consideration of an antilynching bill is not new. I can remember back as far as 1922, when the House spent a whole week in the consideration of an antilynching bill and adopted it at that time by a huge vote, practically only the solid South voting against it. Since then we have had several debates on this issue, the last one in 1937, with the same results. The question is not why this Federal antilynching bill is brought up now, but why it was not enacted into law years ago.

What is the argument against the bill that is repeated over and over again until by mere weight of repetition it creates in the minds of some Members of Congress, particularly new Members who have not had the time to study the constitutionality of the antilynching bill, the belief that the bill is unconstitutional. Members of the House without definite study are apt to believe that there is something in this charge. I am not a constitutional lawyer, I do not pretend to be; but at least I understand the English language, I understand the wording of the Constitution of the United States, and it is very, very clear and precise. This anti-lynching bill is no border-line case; it is not out on the outer edge or the extreme limits of the Constitution. It is within the limits and confines of the Constitution, and actually right in the middle and very heart of the Constitution. It is written there specifically so that anyone who can read can find it in the provisions of the fourteenth amendment. Lengthy and stupendous arguments against the constitutionality of this legislation have been made, but as inexplicable as the pyramids.

Someone said when people were hungry and starving and the relief bill was under consideration that you cannot eat the Constitution. Now, the cry is raised again that the Constitution must be preserved, not this time against hungry people but to deny the enacting of legislation to defend the lives and liberties of American citizens. It would be ridiculous if not so tragic as to hide behind the Constitution to thwart legislation to safeguard the lives of our citizens against lawlessness and mob violence in defiance of law and order and the Constitution itself. We have heard much of what life and liberty does not mean. Why not state what life and liberty does mean in America within the confines of the Constitution? The cry that the Constitution is in danger and that we are conspirators trying to destroy it is sheer political baloney. The fact is that we who are in favor of this legislation are acting within the spirit and letter of the Constitution to preserve the lives of our own people from being destroyed without due process of law guaranteed by the Constitution. There can be no proper denial of the constitutionality of the anti-lynching bill. I do not believe that even the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox], who is a constitutional lawyer and who has his own reasons for being against the bill, would get up on the floor of the House and state that the bill is unconstitutional. Because of the various charges that have been made, however, a myth has been created in the minds of some Members of Congress who have not taken the time or have not had an opportunity to investigate for themselves exactly what the Constitution says in regard to this legislation.

Let us see what the fourteenth amendment is and what the intent and purposes of the fourteenth amendment are, because it is on the fourteenth amendment that the entire bill is based so far as its constitutionality is concerned. The fourteenth amendment was passed by the Congress on June 13, 1866, being the second of the Civil War amendments. It followed right on the Civil War and was enacted for the purpose of carrying out the intent of the Congress to protect the rights of the newly made citizens under the thirteenth amendment, the colored people of our country. The resolution was signed on June 15 and was received by the Secretary of State the next day, on the same basis as that under which the thirteenth amendment became a part of the Constitution. There were 36 States to vote on it, and 28 were required for the necessary three-quarters majority.

Secretary Seward made a conditional certification of the ratification on July 20, 1868, but on July 21 Congress by concurrent resolution declared that the amendment had been ratified by 29 States and directed Secretary Seward to promulgate it as a part of the Constitution, which he did on the 28th of July in a lengthy statement, showing he acted under the above order from the Congress.

There can be no question of the intent and purpose of the fourteenth amendment. Now, what is the fourteenth amendment? It reads in part as follows:

No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of a citizen of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

Section 5 of the said fourteenth amendment is as follows:

The Congress shall have power to enforce by appropriate legislation the provisions of this article.

As shown by section 5, it is evident that the fourteenth amendment is more than a prohibition upon State action. It is a grant of power to the Federal Government to take affirmative action to prevent a denial of these rights by the States.

The fifth amendment included the same provision that no State shall deprive any person of his life, liberty, or property, and practically the same intent was written into the Declaration of Independence. So in these two great American charters of American liberty, the Declaration of Independence and the Federal Constitution we find a definite provision practically guaranteeing the lives and liberty of all American citizens. You have the specific wording in the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution substantiating the pending bill, but if you did not have that, it would not actually be required, because it is the very essence of the formation of our government and of any republican form of government.

The reason for most governments is the protection of the lives of its citizens and to insure them a trial by jury under due process of law and an equal protection under the laws. But, in spite of that fact, these indefinite charges are made that the pending bill is unconstitutional. Of course, that is what they said about the efforts to do away with slavery and even about the thirteenth amendment; that is what they said about the Civil War itself, and so on down the line. But, as Al Smith used to say, "Let us look at the record."

What does the record disclose? It discloses that there is a provision in the Constitution itself that guarantees definitely the protection of the lives of American citizens and guarantees them a trial by jury under due process of law. It is an amusing spectacle to see the southern Members squirm and wiggle about State rights and invasion of State sovereignty when they by their votes during the last 8 years have practically destroyed State rights and State sovereignty under the New Deal administration. Most of the States of the Union have been brought up for sentence and passed through the Caudine Forks of subjugation by the Roosevelt regime with the help of the votes of southern Democrats.

However, the Republicans are not altogether free from blame, for if I remember rightly, the prohibition amendment went into effect under a Republican administration and it was supported very largely by the votes from the solid South. There could not have been a greater invasion of State rights and the police force of the Southern States than the prohibition amendment. We sent Federal prohibition agents down there to enforce that law by and with the consent and encouragement of the solid South. So both parties are to blame as far as State rights and the invasion of State rights are concerned.

Mr. Chairman, we have ample authority for writing into law a Federal anti-lynching bill. I do not ask you to rely on my judgment. Committees of the Congress in the past, the Judiciary Committee of the House and the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, have passed upon the constitutionality of legislation of this type and have recommended it on the basis of its constitutionality to both branches of the Congress.

That is why I refuse to be silent in the closing minutes of this general debate and take this opportunity to defend the bill against the wanton and loose charge that it is unconstitutional. I understand the reason why Members from the South can logically oppose the bill and, may I say, they have made effective arguments that lynching is decreasing each year and therefore there is no necessity for the bill. This may not be the last time we will have an anti-lynching bill up for consideration in the Congress. As long as there is one single lynching in the land, if this bill fails to pass the Senate, another anti-lynching bill will be introduced here, because we propose to enact a Federal law against lynching until lynching is wiped out in this country. As long as life and liberty are protected by guaranties of the Constitution, how can anyone ask for less?

I want to commend the gentlemen from the South because they too have joined in the general attack and condemnation of this outrageous, un-American, bestial, and barbaric practice of lynching, whether it be in the South or in the North. It is the worst crime in America. It is even worse than kidnaping, because it is not only murder, it is an attack upon the courts and upon our institutions and upon our very form of government. Lynching and lawlessness by mob violence constitutes anarchy and a direct attack upon our republican form of government.

Mr. Chairman, if we did not have the fourteenth amendment, or the fifth amendment, we could enact a Federal antilynching law under that clause of the Constitution which guarantees to every State a republican form of government. When mobs take the law into their own hands, thereby destroying law and order, they attack our courts and institutions and endanger our republican form of government guaranteed by the Federal Constitution to every State in the Union.

Mr. COLMER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. COLMER. I am sure that the distinguished gentleman from New York desires to be fair. Would he not agree with me that an amendment which I propose to offer, including gang murders with lynching, would be very appropriate as a part of this legislation?

Mr. FISH. I imagine it would be constitutional, if that is what the gentleman wants me to say; but I am not in favor of the gentleman's amendment. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 7 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, the question before the House today, as presented by this bill, is largely an academic question. It is academic rather than practical, because the problem for which it proposes a solution has already been solved and is no longer mentioned in any agenda for national consideration submitted by competent authority anywhere outside this House. It is purely academic because no action which may, or might be, taken by the House of Representatives here today, or at any other time during this session, will have any effect whatever on the problem sought to be solved or will result in the adoption of measures, either legislative or administrative in any way affecting the subject. And it is further academic and scholastic for the reason that even if enacted into law the bill as written would prove wholly ineffective in achieving the purpose for which presented.

I am certain that every Member who has spoken on this bill, either yesterday or today, or who has considered it as presented from the floor, has approached it from a patriotic point of view. It is apparent that those who have advocated its enactment, and those who have opposed it are sincere and earnest in their efforts to contribute to the general welfare. In many respects their differences are merely differences of methods and expediency.

For, in essentials, we are all on common ground. There is no difference of opinion as to the subject matter of the bill. No one condones it. No one approves it. It is indefensible. We are all of one mind in that respect.

Nor should it be a partisan question. It is neither racial nor sectional. In that unhappy period of readjustment in our history which gave rise to occasion for the agitation for this legislation, and which is now merely historical, men of all races and creeds and nationalities supplied provocation for, and were victims of, lynch law. And in every metropolitan city in the land, sooner or later, men have taken the law into their own hands—or have openly defied the law—and whether they stood their victims up against a wall and mowed them down with machine guns, or hung them to the nearest tree or telephone pole—or “took them for a ride,” the spirit and the crime and the result was all the same. I remember very well of hearing Speaker Clark tell of the numerous lynchings—of common occurrence—which followed the close of the war in Anderson County, Ky., where the animosities fostered by the internecine strife flowered into reprisals against adherents of both sides. He made this significant statement. He said, “You know, it doesn't require a mob to lynch a man. Two men can lynch him as easily as a hundred—and with considerable more safety.” And that is still true. Today two men can pick up their unsuspecting victim on the crowded streets of the city and take him for a ride—from which he never returns—as easily and with a good deal less justification than a frantic mob of a thousand men can wreak vengeance on a malefactor in swamp or forest. And there is no difference in the sight of the law.

But happily it is a problem which has already been solved. The crime of lynching is to all practical considerations virtually extinct. It is as dead as dueling. While three instances were reported in the United States last year, an examination reveals the fact that none of the three could be conceded to be bona fide. Enlightened public sentiment and local law enforcement have removed not only the crime itself but the provocation for the crime.

I shall not discuss the unconstitutionality of the proposed law, so conclusively established by the gentlemen who have preceded me, but I desire to again call attention to the utter futility of these proceedings. Regardless of any action or whatever action may be taken by the House on this bill, its introduction and consideration here is but a futile gesture, in view of the fact that there is no likelihood or possibility of the Senate even taking it up, much less passing it. That is the history of all such legislation. A similar bill has twice passed the House, once in 1922 and again in 1937, and in neither instance did the Senate committees report it out. So even the most sanguine supporter of the bill can have no thought that it will become a law, either in this Congress or in any other Congress. It is an anachronism, a relic of post-bellum days, a wraith conjured up out of the tragic past—a chapter in American history which all would prefer to forget. And any discussion of it here must be purely scholastic. Its only effect is to make this floor a sounding board from which to project to the country and the world a false and misleading picture of American life and American civilization, to be cited by predatory governments in extenuation of outrages which they are trying to justify before the court of world opinion.

Its only effect is to drag from the oblivion of an obscure and silent grave the dead, buried, and forgotten specter of sectionalism; to open anew old wounds mercifully healed by the passage of the years; to take us back once more to the Gethsemane of reconstruction days for which both North and South have made agonized atonement.

Let the dead past bury its dead. Let nothing menace the militant spirit of national unity, so strong and so needed at this critical time. Let us banish from this forum the dissension and discord that stir the ancient passions of a forgotten day and give the time and attention of this House to the problems which press upon us from every side and for which this Congress, in concord and cooperation, can provide an adequate and effective solution. [Applause.]

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BECKWORTH].

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say that I am opposed to the adoption or enactment of this legislation—the antilynching bill—primarily because there is absolutely no reason to enact legislation designed to produce a result which has practically been reached to perfection through the orderly efforts of the local law-enforcement authorities.

There is an old proverb which admonishes us to “ponder the path of thy footsteps and let thy way be established.” This admonition has been admirably accepted by us in the South, where the proponents of the antilynching bill contend lynchings have occurred, and we have definitely established our way to obviate the occurrence of lynchings. All we need is to be left alone. We shall continue to do the job as we have done it, for our people of the South are law-abiding and freedom-loving people.

Yes; the people of the South have moved steadily and speedily in the direction of wiping out lynchings until, as has been several times pointed out in this debate, there occurred last year only three lynchings in the entire United States. What other phase of lawlessness has even equaled this record of success?

Although perfection is never reached relative to any phase of government, the people of this Nation have almost reached it in regard to doing away with lynchings. Very little better could the situation be were every lawmaking body in the United States, including this Congress, to enact each a dozen laws or statutes endeavoring to lessen this nefarious practice.

Why, then, depart from a system which has virtually reached perfection to try a method which is untried, hatred-breeding, ire-arousing, vindictive, and definitely unconstitutional? It occurs to me that the proponents of this bill are having much difficulty—yes; complete failure has beset them—in their efforts to prove the necessity of the legislation. It is patent that the job begun several decades ago has about been finished—and a job mighty well done it is.

Lynching in my generation is little more than a matter of hearsay. I have never seen a lynching—and this is not surprising to a single Member of Congress—nor have I heard in the vicinity where I live of anticipatory lynchings; too, at least a fourth of the people in my district are black. By all means, we should not idly legislate, as is being done here today.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of the time allotted the opposition.

Mr. Chairman, the humorous high light of this debate was the wrangle between our friends of the Republican Party, which they love to call the Grand Old Party, and the gentleman from Illinois, ARTHUR MITCHELL. The issue joined between them might be stated thus: Resolved, that while we are all more or less insincere in pressing this infamous bill, still, "I am holier than thou."

It is exceedingly amusing to those of us of the opposition at least to see the gentleman from New York, the Honorable JOE GAVAGAN, and the gentleman from Illinois, the Honorable ARTHUR MITCHELL, join with their Republican conferees and coconspirators in perfect agreement on only one point, that it is simply barbaric for three lynchings to have occurred in the South last year, when there never has been in the history of the last two decades a single year when in the cities of New York and Chicago alone there were not more lynchings than there have been in the entire South in any year in all history. [Laughter and applause.]

While these Representatives of Chicago and New York sing their beautiful, harmonious duet, "Holy, holy, holy, only we are holy," they really look hurt when we interrupt to call attention to the fact that the only reason they point the finger of scorn at the South is that they call their lynchings by other names, and claim, therefore, that lynchings occur only in the South! [Laughter and applause.]

Two days after the so-called lynching which occurred near Daytona Beach, Fla., or between there and De Land, and which was not a lynching even under the terms of the Gavagan bill, a rapist was driven off a roof across which he was fleeing in New York City. Although the headlines of every paper in the country had screamed, "Lynching in Florida," the undisputed facts were that a 12-year-old boy had been killed. The taxicab driver who killed him was waylaid on his way to jail, in the custody of an officer, by two men who shot and killed him. The killers were thought to have been brothers of the slain boy. Murder? Yes. Lynching? No; not even under the terms and definition of the Gavagan bill.

Yet every paper in the country screamed "Lynching." Two days later nearly every paper in New York City carried on an inside page this story: Five hundred indignant citizens stoned So-and-So off of the roof of a building. He fell to his death when a gutter broke. He had attacked a woman in an adjoining building. New York papers seemed to regard that as meritorious conduct of 500 indignant citizens of New York, whereas it was a "lynching" in Florida for 2 men to commit murder.

The alleged fact upon which they all agree—that there were three lynchings in the South last year—is almost as false as this duet that they are singing.

I hold in my hand a photostat copy of an article in the New York Times, quoting from the annual reports of the Commission on Interracial Cooperation in Atlanta and Tuskegee Institute on the lynchings of 1939. I shall put it in the RECORD at this point:

LYNCHINGS REDUCED TO THREE FOR WHOLE COUNTRY IN 1939—MOB VIOLENCE IN 18 OTHER CASES WAS PREVENTED BY INCREASED PRECAUTIONS, REPORT COMPILED IN SOUTH SAYS

(By George Hatcher)

ATLANTA, December 30.—Only three lynchings, the lowest number since records were begun 58 years ago, occurred in the United States during 1939, it was disclosed today in annual reports of the Commission on Interracial Cooperation in Atlanta and Tuskegee Institute in Alabama.

R. B. Eleazer, educational director of the Commission on Interracial Cooperation, pointed out that the 1939 figure is 96 percent less than the average and 99 percent less than the peak year of 1892, when 231 lynchings were recorded.

"The Nation can well be proud of the progress that has been made in efforts to eradicate the mob-violence evil," Mr. Eleazer said. "While the expansion of law-enforcement agencies in recent years has been a major contributing factor, most of the credit must fall to religious and civic agencies which have crusaded against it."

LYNCHINGS PREVENTED

During 1939 there were reports of 18 instances in which lynchings were prevented. This was accomplished either by the transfer of suspects to secret jails or by the augmenting of guards and other precautions.

"A total number of 25 persons—5 white men and 20 Negro men—were thus saved from the hands of mobs," the reports state.

Of the persons lynched, two were Negroes and one was white. Two of the lynchings were in Florida and the other one was in Mississippi.

The year's first lynching occurred at Panama City, Fla., on April 1, when Miles W. Brown, a white man, was shot to death after being taken from the Bay County jail by a band of four or five masked men. Brown had been convicted of the first-degree murder of a former employer, with a recommendation for mercy, which carries a mandatory sentence of life imprisonment. Brown's jail guards quoted the masked men as expressing resentment that Brown had not received the death penalty, and saying that "the law didn't do justice but we will."

ANOTHER FLORIDA CASE

The second lynching took place on April 29, near Daytona Beach, Fla. An automobile driven by Lee Snell, Negro taxi driver, struck a bicycle ridden by Benny Blackwelder, 12. The boy was killed almost instantly. Snell was immediately taken into custody by Daytona Beach police and held for county authorities. A few hours afterward, Constable James Durden swore out a warrant for Snell, charging him with manslaughter. He took the prisoner in custody and started for De Land, the county seat. When he had got about 4 miles from Daytona Beach, Constable Durden said he was overtaken and passed by an automobile occupied by Everett and Earl Blackwelder, brothers of the boy killed.

According to Constable Durden, the Blackwelders swung their car across the road, blocking it. When Snell got out of the constable's automobile, several shots were fired into his body, the officer stated. The brothers were indicted on a first-degree murder charge but were acquitted.

The third victim of lynching was Joe Rogers, a Negro sawmill worker at Canton, Miss. Rogers allegedly engaged in an altercation with a white foreman of the sawmill. The foreman, according to witnesses, was struck on the head and knocked unconscious. Several days later the Negro's body was found in Pearl River near Canton, bound and badly beaten.

According to Mr. Eleazer, there have been 4,689 recorded lynchings in the United States since 1882.

The first one is the Florida case, about which I have just told you. It was, clearly, not a lynching.

The second one is the only lynching to occur in the whole country this year, except north of the Mason and Dixon's line, where there were some 700.

The only one to occur in the South was this second one, where a man by the name of Roy Van Kleeck, prominent white, well-liked merchant in the hardware business at Panama City, Fla., had in his employ one Miles W. Brown, a white man, whom he caught stealing and discharged from his employ. Some days later the body of Van Kleeck was found in a bayou 15 miles from Panama City.

Brown was arrested, tried, and convicted of murder in the first degree, his sentence being fixed at life imprisonment. This leniency in not imposing the death sentence on Brown aroused some indignation, and, it is thought, caused a few hotheads to take the matter into their own hands. Four or five of them went to the jail, took this man out, and lynched him. This was a horrible crime. No defense is offered. We hang our heads in the other States of the South with Florida in shame that this—the only lynching in the South in 1939—should have stained the escutcheon of Florida.

The third one, according to the quoted reports, is alleged to have happened at Canton, Miss. I have this telegram from Hon. C. N. Harris, the mayor of that city, addressed to the gentleman from Mississippi, the Honorable DAN R. McGEHEE, Member of Congress:

Negro Rogers not positively identified. Found dead in Pearl River several months ago. Reported he had struck white man several days prior. Investigated by sheriff and grand jury. Verdict he came to death by party or parties unknown. Body found near Rankin County side of river. No evidence of lynching. Positively no lynching occurred in Canton or Madison Counties past 24 months.

I quote from the Times' article:

The third victim of lynching was Joe Rogers, a Negro sawmill worker at Canton, Miss. Rogers allegedly engaged in an altercation with a white foreman of the sawmill. The foreman, according to witnesses, was struck on the head and knocked unconscious. Several days later the Negro's body was found in Pearl River, near Canton, bound and badly beaten.

That may or may not have been a lynching, but the local authorities investigated it and certified that this body was not positively identified, but that there was no evidence of lynching even if the body was that of Joe Rogers, and that no lynching has occurred in Canton or Madison County in the past 2 years.

So, only one lynching occurred in the South in 1939. The victim was a white man.

So much for that. We now come to My Old Kentucky Home. We have had two distinguished gentlemen from Kentucky [Mr. CREAL and Mr. ROBSION] get up here supporting this bill and prove our case for us. They say that while there are some liars in Kentucky, nevertheless the local officials, of whom the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CREAL] said he was one, are preventing miscarriages of justice and all lynchings.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Oh, will the gentleman yield? I made no statement about a lot of bad liars in Kentucky. I cannot recall any such character in Kentucky.

Mr. HOBBS. I was sure that would be the gentleman's reaction.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I made no such statement.

Mr. HOBBS. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CREAL] called the girl of his story a damned liar on the floor of this House and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION] himself said that there were instances in which, through perjured testimony, justice had miscarried or innocent persons had been executed.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Oh, no; I made no such statement. I said nothing about any testimony or perjury or anything else. I said that one person had been lynched and it had turned out later on that he was not guilty.

Mr. HOBBS. Then I apologize profusely and admit that, so far as you know, nothing wrong ever happened in Kentucky.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I did not make the statement which the gentleman attributed to me.

Mr. HOBBS. If I misquoted you, I am sorry and apologize. The point I make is that those two gentlemen proved our case. They say that through local influence and diligent official work lynching has been stamped out in Kentucky. That is the story all over the South. It is true of Mississippi where there was no lynching last year. It is true in Florida where there was the only one in the whole United States, except north of the Mason and Dixon's line.

The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES] says that the House is entitled to the opinion of the Judiciary Committee. I say to my friend from Kansas that I do not believe that he would have paid a bit more attention to the opinion of the Committee on the Judiciary if it had been adverse to his belief than the colored man in Uniontown, Ala., did to the newly installed traffic light. He stood parked in his model T for 15 minutes watching this new contraption and then went right through on the red light. He was arrested and taken before the mayor. He said to the mayor, "I didn't mean no harm. I never seed one of them things before. I stood there for 15 minutes, and I seen all the white folks going through on the green light, so I figured naturally that the red must be for us niggers." [Laughter.]

Mr. REES of Kansas. Does not the gentleman really feel as a member of that committee, one of the distinguished committees of this House, a committee for which, generally speaking, we have considerable respect, that since this bill was committed to his committee for consideration we are entitled to have the bill considered by that committee and not just passed by with a wave of the hand and nothing done about it. Is that the way we are supposed to legislate on the floor of the House? Tell me that.

Mr. HOBBS. I will be glad to tell the gentleman that, and I tell him, emphatically, "No." This practice is inexcusably rotten. This bill ought not to be on the floor of this House until the Judiciary Committee has passed upon it. I make no apology for this irregular, ill-advised, illicit procedure, and I say that the gentleman is exactly right, but I still say, in the best spirit, that he would not have paid any attention to us at all unless we had held that it is constitutional, which it is not.

Mr. REES of Kansas. The gentleman can arrive at his own conclusion.

Mr. HOBBS. And that is certainly right.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Is not this procedure in accordance with the rules of the House?

Mr. HOBBS. I think so; and I say this vehemently: It ought not to be.

The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES] also led off his talk by saying that the purpose of this bill is to prevent lynching. If anybody on God's earth will show me how it will militate in one iota for the prevention of lynching, I shall support it. Nobody can show that, because it just simply is not true. Let us be practical. Do you think it is going to have a deterrent effect on a bunch of hoodlums, such as have been described, taking part in mob violence, who have not a dollar and do not own a dime's worth of property?

Do you think it will have a deterrent effect upon them to make their county pay $10,000? It does not cost them a nickel. It is no skin off their backs, and it cannot be a deterrent from that standpoint. All right. How can it be a deterrent? Mark you, I do not say that it does not provide post-mortem punishment for the crime; but how can it prevent lynching? It cannot. Pardon this reference, but suppose you gentlemen were members of a mob who were intent upon killing me. Could Uncle Sam protect me? In no way in the world; and when I am dead, I am dead, and no amount of fining the District of Columbia could bring me back to life.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. Not for the moment. You could summon the soldiers from Fort Myer, and they might come clattering up the Avenue, but all they would be able to do would be to put me on a stretcher and take me down to the autopsy where they would say I was dead.

Mr. BROOKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I will be glad to yield to the distinguished gentleman.

Mr. BROOKS. I would like to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that, as far as the South is concerned, lynching has been gradually—in fact, almost completely—exterminated at the present time?

Mr. HOBBS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BROOKS. And as far as the country as a whole is concerned, is it not a fact that lynching is one of the few crimes that is being exterminated, and other crimes, such as murder, arson, rape, and crimes of that sort are not being completely exterminated, yet no Federal assistance is being asked to exterminate those crimes?

Mr. HOBBS. The gentleman's question is double-barreled. I say, emphatically, "Yes" to the first barrel, which is that not only is it being exterminated in the South but that it is being done by the only force on God's earth that can prevent lynching—enlightened local sentiment and action at the scene of the crime before the killing occurs. As to the second barrel of the gentleman's question, Is it not a fact that in the Nation as a whole lynching is decreasing? I will say "No." North of the Mason and Dixon's line—you can smile if you like, Brother; I love you just the same—it is a fact that within the last two decades there has been an enormous increase of lynching in New York City, Chicago, and everywhere else where gangster rule and other things dominate the local situation. [Applause.]

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I gladly yield to the gentleman.

Mr. RANKIN. I did not hear all of the gentleman's speech. I am wondering if the gentleman noticed this Associated Press account of the militia of Mississippi which has spent the last several days protecting a Negro murderer?

Mr. HOBBS. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANKIN. This happens not once, but this happens every year. We spend more money protecting Negro murderers that you people with this stuff are encouraging, than it would cost the State if you went ahead and passed this bill and they lynched every one of them and you sued us for damages.

Mr. HOBBS. Oh, this bill will never cost us a dime.

Mr. RANKIN. I know it.

Mr. HOBBS. We have won our fight. We have cleaned our slate, but the ones who are standing in front of the gun are the ones that they are trying to protect by this bill, by eliminating any possible punishment for killings in race riots, gangster "rides," and "labor disputes," which we have in the North so often. If this bill should become law and if the courts should uphold its constitutionality, it would not be long before it would be amended to provide punishment for the hundreds of lynchings occurring in the North.

Then you would find prosecutions and suits popping like a bunch of firecrackers in New York and Chicago and these other cities where the real lynchings occur—several hundred a year. You would see these proponents sick of their bargain then.

Mr. McKEOUGH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. Certainly; I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. McKEOUGH. The gentleman from Alabama has referred to several hundred lynchings a year north of the Mason and Dixon's line.

Mr. HOBBS. Yes, sir.

Mr. McKEOUGH. I wonder if the gentleman will indicate, from his research and study, any one of the several mythical lynchings to which he refers as having occurred when the prisoner was taken from the custody of a peace officer in any one of the cities north of the Mason and Dixon's line?

Mr. HOBBS. Of course not, because there are no such instances that are given publicity.

Mr. McKEOUGH. They are not given publicity because they have never happened. If they had happened they would have been in the newspapers. Does the gentleman indicate that the newspapers would not print it as news if that were to have occurred north of the Mason and Dixon's line?

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. Let me answer the gentleman. I submit, sir, that they did it, and praised the mob for lynching a man in New York City.

Mr. McKEOUGH. The mob took the prisoner from a peace officer of the city of New York?

Mr. HOBBS. Not at all.

Mr. McKEOUGH. Well, this is aimed at a particular situation where, in your section of the Nation, a mob takes a prisoner from the custody of a peace officer of the State. There is a very, very marked difference.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I do not yield to anybody until I have answered this question, and I do not want to be interrupted until I have finished, if you please.

The instance I have cited is typical of the attitude of the press in that they are unfair and suppress news of that kind when it occurs above the Mason and Dixon's line. I say further that they may not have taken them away from the hands of officers. I do not know, and neither do you; but I say that it is just as wrong, if not more so, to kill an innocent man than it is to kill a guilty one, and this bill is aimed only at punishing those who kill the guilty ones. The gentleman is misinformed if he thinks that this bill is aimed only at those who are taken out of the hands of officers of the law. That is not so.

Mr. McKEOUGH. I think it is.

Mr. HOBBS. It does not make any difference what you think. I will read you what the bill says.

Mr. McKEOUGH. Nor what you think. It is in the judgment of the Congress to decide.

Mr. HOBBS. Now, let us not get hot over this thing. I want to read you what the bill says. It does not say what you say it says.

I read from lines 5 and 6 on page 2:

In the custody of any peace officer or suspected of, charged with, or convicted of the commission of any offense.

Whenever I make a positive statement, I am usually prepared to back it up.

I yield briefly, for a question only, to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. I just wanted to call the gentleman's attention to the question he has already answered, that these people who were lynched in New York, and those sections of the country were innocent people, whereas the ones they are trying to protect are only the guilty criminals.

Mr. McKEOUGH rose.

Mr. HOBBS. I am sorry, I cannot yield further to anyone.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama has 4 minutes remaining.

Mr. HOBBS. For a moment permit me to call attention to the sincere argument presented here by my friend the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. VOYSE]. He cited two cases, and I know he did it honestly, sincerely, but they do not sustain his argument at all. He did not read the decisions, he read excerpts. One of them was a tax case. I can cite you a hundred authorities that hold that taxes illegally collected can be recovered from a county by suits. Of course, they can.

But the case cited by the gentleman from Ohio was even stronger against the position he is trying to maintain than many other tax cases, in that it was the case of 67 Indians who had been coerced into paying an unlawful exaction of taxes on lands exempt from taxation by Federal law and the Constitution of the United States. The other case is just as bad; that is, the case of an action on bonds and coupons in default, a suit to collect past-due bonds and coupons issued by a county. If you want to talk about suing counties, it has been done ever since the year 1, as Justice Brewer says; but I want to give you common sense instead of citations. Now, listen to me just a minute.

I own an automobile; so do you. You commit your automobile to the custody of your chauffeur under instructions to take it to a garage and have it greased, oiled, and bring it back home. He takes it down there but goes on with his sweetie for a joy ride. Are you responsible for his negligent driving of that automobile after leaving the garage? You are not. Neither are you liable for his negligent driving in violation of your instructions if he never goes near the garage. You are not responsible in the slightest degree for his negligence, or for his willful misconduct, though it result in injuring or killing someone. The same thing is true here. Later in my argument I am going to give you the authorities to back this up.

The sponsors of this bill use the same citations every year. The two cited by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. VOYSE] are the only two new citations that have come into this debate, I think. That is why I commented upon them.

A county is liable when it has the authority from the State to act in the premises and then only when the conduct which caused the damage is corporate conduct, as opposed to governmental. Paving a street is corporate. Creating a park, enforcing the law, are governmental acts. There may be no suit against a county or even a municipality on a case of governmental conduct.

Here is the thing I want you to hear me through on for just 1 minute—if you never hear another word I say—here is the milk in this coconut: You cannot find a case in all the law books—not one—that will hold that any State, county, or municipality can be sued unless it acted within the purview of its authority given by grant of the State. In other words, when the State itself interdicts, outlaws, and condemns lynching, as 23 States do, no county can be held liable, nor can the State, if officers of the law violate their oaths and the law of the State by failing to enforce the State's anti-lynching law. No such officer can be an agent; he is not acting in conformity with the orders of the State, but transcending his authority and flying in the face of his orders. You cannot show me a case that does not support that position. [Applause.]

The theory of the proponents seems to be that counties are exactly the same as States when it comes to the act or omission penalized, yet as different as day from night when it comes to the exemption which a State enjoys from suit.

But, after all, we are not dependent upon careful analysis to demonstrate the fallacy of this contention of the proponents. Anyone who will think for a moment can see that in reality every suit against any county would necessarily involve the State also; if the judgment is to be paid, it will be paid with tax money, at least a part of which belongs to the State in every instance—usually 50 percent. So the State, though not nominally a party to the suit against the county, will have to pay part of the judgment if collected. Therefore this bill is in contravention of the spirit of the eleventh amendment—doing indirectly that which could not be done directly.

There are a number of striking features in this bill:

First. There are no provisions making lynching a crime.

Second. Under this bill no benefit is conferred upon anyone living in the District of Columbia, nor in St. Louis, Mo., nor, possibly, on Government reservations, parks, and forests. To have a slice of GAVAGAN's pie, you must live in a county.

Third. If an innocent person is lynched, his dependents get nothing.

Fourth. If a guilty person is lynched, his folks get a prize up to $10,000 for having reared a criminal.

Fifth. Killings in race riots, labor disputes, and gangster "rides" are not lynchings, according to the definition contained in this bill. Read section 2 carefully. This is true, even after the author amended it by striking out the provision:

Provided, however, That "lynching" shall not be deemed to include violence occurring during the course of picketing or boycotting or any incident in connection with any "labor dispute," as that term is defined and used in the act of March 23, 1932 (47 Stat. 70).

It will be noted that section 2, as amended, defines as lynching only those killings wherein the victim is in the custody of a peace officer or suspected of or charged with or convicted of the commission of an offense and that the killing must have been done with the purpose or consequence of preventing the apprehension or trial or punishment by law of the victim. No gangster, labor, nor race-riot killing ever was done with that purpose or consequence. Rarely is the victim of race riot, labor dispute, or gangster "ride" "suspected of, charged with, or convicted of the commission of any offense."

Sixth. The bill authorizes not only the punishment by fine and imprisonment of local officers, but also of the Governor of the State.

Seventh. In any action instituted under section 5 against a county a showing either "that apprehension of danger of mob violence was general within the community where the abduction or lynching occurred" or "of any other circumstance or circumstances from which the trier of fact might reasonably conclude that the governmental subdivision had failed to use all diligence to protect the person or persons abducted or lynched shall be prima facie evidence of liability."

This does not require that any official of the county should have known of the apprehension of such danger. The community where the abduction or lynching occurred might have been in an isolated and distant portion of the county, without telephone connection or other means of communication. The apprehension may have existed only for a few minutes—entirely too short a time for the county officials to be notified, and, of course, too short a time for them to do anything to avert the impending danger. Let me illustrate: In a river bend 30 miles from the county seat 10 families live—50 people. There is no telephone, no telegraph instrument, and no radio-broadcasting station. There is not even a good road to the county seat, and there is not a single automobile in the whole community. One night they hear bloodhounds coming into the bend in full cry. They hear the shouts of the members of a mob as the victim is treed. They rush out of their 10 homes and see by the light of the fire the mob is building that they have treed a man.

The apprehension of danger of mob violence appeared first in the mind of the only man awake in the bend, when he heard the dogs. It was 2 o'clock in the morning. He had not wakened his wife nor children, as the sound grew louder other neighbors roused and the apprehension spread. It became general about the time the fire was blazing and they could see the object of the search. Within 5 minutes the fire was high enough to give the mob vision of the man up the tree, and he was immediately shot down. This is purely a hypothetical case, but it is by such hypotheses that the wisdom of legislative provisions may be tested. Under such circumstances should Congress pass a law providing that because generally among these 50 people in the river bend there was apprehension of danger of mob violence—wholly without regard to time, notice to officials, or opportunity to avert the threatened tragedy—the county shall be prima facie liable up to $10,000, although not a single member of the mob may have been a resident of that county.

But the next alternative is even worse. Any single circumstance from which the trier of fact might reasonably conclude that the governmental subdivision had failed to use all diligence to protect the victim, shall be prima facie evidence of liability. This abolishes the rule of law requiring the trier of fact to consider all of the credible evidence. If there be one single trivial circumstance from which he might reasonably conclude that the county had failed to use—not due diligence, but all diligence—a prima facie case is made out against the county up to $10,000.

The gentleman from New York, the Honorable HAMILTON FISH, has made a number of speeches in this forum during his long service in this body, in which he has repeatedly laid claim to excellent qualities of mind and heart—of course, always with becoming modesty. But today, for the first time I have heard him claim to be a prophet. He said I have been convinced for 20 years that this bill is constitutional. It was first introduced on January 3, 1939. And it is quite different from the preceding bills of its kind.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] further claims that everyone knows that it is the duty of the Government of the United States to protect the lives of its citizens. Cooley, Rose, and Story—three of the greatest commentators upon the Constitution of the United States—disagree with the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH]. They all have said repeatedly that the protection of the lives of citizens is one of the police powers which was expressly reserved to the States and is not possessed by the Government of the United States.

Please let me read an editorial which appeared in the Washington Post yesterday:

ANTILYNCHING POLITICS

Politics inevitably intrudes into a congressional session preceding a general election. Every action that is taken is likely to be considered from the viewpoint of its political effect. But that does not justify the injection of mere time-wasting political gestures into a session that is confronted by more urgent legislation than it can hope to enact.

The antilynching bill taken up by the House yesterday must be placed in this category. It has previously passed the House only to be killed by filibuster in the Senate. There can scarcely be any doubt that the bill would encounter a similar fate if it should be passed by the House and again submitted to the Senate for debate. To avoid another filibuster and serious disruption of their legislative program Senate leaders would probably pigeonhole the bill.

There is no reason, moreover, for pressing the bill at this time. A few years ago, when the barbarous practice of lynching persons suspected of crime was common in the South, a plausible case could be made for some sort of Federal interference. Now lynching has virtually disappeared. Every State, except Mississippi and Florida, had a clear record in 1939 so far as this dastardly crime is concerned. And in those two States only three lynchings were reported.

With the problem thus narrowed to two States, there is no excuse whatever for the enactment of an antilynching bill that would violate the constitutional division of powers between the Federal Government and the States. Indeed, the proposal of Federal penalties for State officials who fail to do their duty was never acceptable. It presumes to exercise a power which the Constitution denies to the Federal Government. Failure of a few States adequately to protect their own citizens, inexcusable though it is, does not justify such a gross encroachment upon their constitutional rights.

When such cogent objections to the bill are added to the fact that the States have almost completed the task of putting their own houses in order, no reasonable excuse is left for reviving the antilynching bill in Congress. Regardless of what action the House may take, the bill will doubtless remain a dead letter. Yet some legislators insist on reviving it in an election year in the hope of winning votes.

The issue, of course, is not lynching. That outrageous and uncivilized practice is condemned by almost every Member of Congress. With the current improvement in State law enforcement, it will doubtless soon be wiped out. The question by which the House is confronted is whether one group of legislators shall be permitted to make political capital out of this general hatred of lynching to the detriment of a crowded legislative program.

Here is what the distinguished columnist, Westbrook Pegler, wrote:

THE ANTYLYNCHING BILL

Sudden death is common in this country, where the automobile killed 38,000 last year and the homicide list normally amounts to around 12,000—a total just about equal to the roll of Americans who were killed or died of wounds in the big war. Yet, in the name of humanity, the work of the National Senate is being held up for another long, time-killing debate on a bill to provide penalties for lynching, of which there were only 8 in 1937.

What is the urgency of this bill that it must take precedence over every other problem in a country which is just barely under control anyway? And is any vice which has claimed fewer than 5,000 victims in 50 years and an average of less than 14 a year in the last decade deserving of such importance?

Lynching is a declining sport even in the South, where 30 years ago it was a matter of such familiar routine in the news that the press telegraph operators on the southern leg devised an informal addition to the Phillips code, the XYZ sign, which means "A posse is in pursuit of the Negro, and if caught he will surely be lynched."

In recent years the totals have fallen so low that to argue that lynching is a national concern is to persist blindly and obstructively in behalf of a mere contention. The reason for this bill has shrunk so small by now that, even allowing for revivals, as in the year 1933, when 28 were lynched, it is obvious that the evil is being cured by local processes.

Nevertheless, the proponents of the antilynching bill, undeterred by the filibuster in the recent special session and unimpressed by the importance of legislation bearing on the mess in which the country finds itself, insist on immediate action in the face of a threat by southern Senators to talk it to death if it takes 6 months.

There is no doubt that prejudice rather than enlightened alarm over the constitutional questions of the bill is the reason for special objection by the southern members.

To them and their constituents this bill proposes another damyankee intrusion in their local affairs. It implies that the South is a barbarous land in need of special policing by the Federal Government, which left a very bad impression the last time it gave special attention to law and order in the South.

It would have no practical application in Maine or Vermont, which are not represented in the lynching statistics as far back as 1889, and other Northern States would be only slightly affected.

It contains the sly spirit of the South's own Jim Crow laws, which forbid white people to frequent certain quarters and thus segregate the Negro.

On the other hand, it is hard to credit the advocates of the bill with entire sincerity. It has been used as a political bait in crowded northern Negro centers, and it has, moreover, the support of those who deplore a lynching but can always find reasons why the killings in the Russian purge are not individual tragedies but mere incidents in the struggle of a great, new nation beset on all sides by ruthless conspirators.

And I question the humanitarianism of any professional or semipro bleeding heart who clamors that not a single person must be allowed to hunger, but would stall the entire legislative program in a fight to ham through a law intended, at the most optimistic figure, to save 14 lives a year.

Actually it might not save any lives. The decline of lynching shows that the lives are being saved by a rising sense of responsibility in the southern sheriff and other local causes; and, anyway, the prisoners might be convicted and executed.

This law would only prosecute and attempt to convict a negligent or cowardly sheriff and would impose financial liability up to $10,000 on the guilty county itself. And, like as not, Washington would then give the county the money to pay the indemnity.

To some of us in the North, the bill is an amusing revenge. Southern public opinion and southern statesmen 15 years ago were strong advocates of national prohibition as a means of keeping the Negro apart from the fo-bit bottle of square face on Saturday nights and preserving their local peace. They were then ready to acknowledge the right of the Federal Government to suppress local habits of the North, much less harmful than the lynching custom, and they constantly urged the Government to reconstruct us according to their ideas.

Another eminent writer, Mark Sullivan, wrote this:

If eternal vigilance is the price of liberty, so is eternal clarity the price of understanding. And so also is understanding the path to wise action. All three of these truisms are applicable to the so-called antilynching bill now before Congress. Lack of understanding of the bill is widespread, is indeed almost universal. The very name by which the bill is popularly called is misleading. Antilynching is a convenient phrase for writers of headlines struggling for condensation against limitations of space. But this is not an antilynching bill. The bill does not make lynching any more a crime than it always has been. The new crime created by the bill is failure of sheriffs or other local officials to be duly diligent in preventing and punishing lynchings.

The popular misunderstanding of the bill goes further. The American Institute of Public Opinion recently conducted one of its "sampling" polls to find out whether or not the so-called antilynching bill is popular. The institute discovered that 72 out of every 100 persons queried favored the bill. But just what was the question which the institute put before those whom it queried? The question read: "Should Congress pass a law which would make lynching a Federal crime?"

Besides, how many of the persons questioned really understood the bill? How many of them were familiar with just what it would do; what effect it would have on the American structure of government—on the distinction between State sovereignty and Federal sovereignty? The persons questioned by the institute must have included, one assumes, a cross section of the population as a whole, from the least informed to the best informed. If the questionnaire did not reach all kinds of persons, the results of it would be by that fact misleading. But if the questionnaire did include the less well-informed, its results must be based in part upon the answers of persons who have little understanding of the measure. Without knowing anything of the process by which the institute of public opinion conducts its questionnaires, I should imagine that a considerable number of those who answered "yes" were merely saying in effect that they believed lynching to be odious.

EFFECT OF MEASURE

Actually, what the bill does is to give a new and portentous power to the Federal Government. It would authorize the Federal Government to send a Federal official into any county or city in which a lynching has occurred to decide whether the local, State, or county officials had practiced "all diligent efforts" in preventing or punishing the lynching. If the Federal official felt the State or county officials had not made "all diligent efforts," then the Federal Government would proceed to fine or imprison the State or county official and also to assess damages of from $2,500 to $10,000 against the county in which the lynching occurred.

This immense extension of Federal jurisdiction, this subjection of local government to government from Washington, is proposed at a fateful time. It is proposed when those now in control of the Federal Government are engaged in an attempt, on many fronts and through many devices, to extend their power to a point at which, in the judgment of thoughtful persons, the States would become little more than mere obsolete names on the map.

There is another path to understanding of the antilynching bill, the political path. From the Civil War on, there has been a considerable Negro population in such cities as Cincinnati, Indianapolis, and St. Louis. For nearly 70 years these colored persons voted the Republican ticket. Since the three cities were in pivotal States, States more or less evenly divided between Republicans and Democrats, this vote was extremely important to the Republicans. It has been said, and I suspect statistics might bear it out, that if every colored person in Ohio, Indiana, and Missouri had always voted the Democratic ticket the Republicans would have lost those States in many Presidential elections and consequently lost the Presidential elections.

GATHERED IN LARGE CITIES

After the Great War considerable Negro populations gathered in other northern cities—New York, Detroit, Chicago. Here again, until 1932, these groups commonly voted Republican.

So long as the colored persons voted Republican, the Republican Party cultivated them by proposing in Congress measures favorable to the Negroes everywhere. I do not recall whether the Republicans proposed antilynching bills like the present one. But the Republicans frequently proposed a measure which would have meant a similar invasion of States' rights by the Federal Government. The Republicans frequently proposed a so-called force bill under which Federal officials and Federal soldiers would have been present at the polls in Southern States to exercise coercion upon State and county officials conducting the local elections.

Since 1932 the Negro colonies in northern cities have prevailingly voted Democratic. So now it is the Democrats who father antilynching bills. The one passed by the House early this year was sponsored by a Democrat from New York City, Representative GAVAGAN. The present bill in the Senate is fathered by a Democratic Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], and a Democratic Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS]. An antilynching bill that was before the Senate some 4 years ago was fathered by a Democratic Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN].

In the present Congress both Republicans and Democrats from the North will compete in their eagerness to support the antilynching bill—the Democrats because they have the Negro vote and hope to keep it; the Republicans because they hope to get it back. But there is one Republican Senator who will not support the measure—and he is perhaps the Senator most competent to have understanding of its constitutional evil, its menace to the American form of government. Senator BORAH has consistently opposed antilynching bills and courageously met the criticism visited upon him. Senator BORAH does not condone lynching. But Senator BORAH knows the danger of approaching the problem of lynching in this way.

So much by way of preliminary. I want to get down now to a discussion of this one point, and that is the unconstitutionality of this bill. The first observation I wish to make is that every State in the Union has an antilynching law of some kind.

There is not any question about it; all of us know that lynching is murder—a crime. Injured parties may now sue officers who fail or neglect to do their duty. All of us favor that remedy through State law. The only question is—and I am addressing myself to some of you gentlemen who joined with the proponents of this measure in favoring it—Has the United States Government a right to butt in? As was said within 3 years after the adoption of the fourteenth amendment in the Slaughterhouse case:

There is no such authority unless it be in the fourteenth amendment.

What does the fourteenth amendment say?—

No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

If the authority of Congress to legislate be not found in those words, it is nowhere.

I want to read to you from Corrigan v. Buckley (271 U. S. 329), about as clear a definition with regard to this whole matter as you will find condensed in one paragraph any place:

Under the pleadings in the present case the only constitutional question involved was that arising under the assertions in the motions to dismiss that the indenture or covenant which is the basis of the bill is void in that it is contrary to and forbidden by the fifth, thirteenth, and fourteenth amendments. This contention is entirely lacking in substance or color of merit. The fifth amendment is a limitation only upon the powers of the General Government and is not directed against the action of individuals. The thirteenth amendment denouncing slavery and involuntary servitude—that is, a condition of enforced compulsory service of one to another—does not in other matters protect the individual rights of persons of the Negro race. And the prohibitions of the fourteenth amendment have reference to State action exclusively, and not to any action of private individuals.

State action of a particular character is that which is prohibited. Individual invasion of individual rights is not the subject matter of this amendment.

So much for that clear-cut definition by the Supreme Court of the meaning of the fourteenth amendment.

We know also that the fourteenth amendment affirmatively is declared by the Constitutional Convention not to mean what the gentleman from New York [Mr. GAVAGAN] and the proponents of this bill had in mind. I quote from the Congressional Globe, volume 37, part 2, page 1034:

The resolution which was offered as the original fourteenth amendment and which was voted down by the Convention:

"Congress shall have power to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper to secure to citizens of each State all privileges and immunities of the citizens of the several States, and to all persons in the several States, equal protection of the right to life, liberty, and property."

That is what the gentleman from New York [Mr. GAVAGAN] and the proponents of this bill contend is the meaning of the fourteenth amendment, but that original amendment the Convention declined even to submit for ratification. That is not what the fourteenth amendment means, and the Convention itself so stated.

Cooley, in his Constitutional Limitations, tells us that the police powers were retained to the sovereign States and there reside to this good day, and that the Federal Government has no right in that sphere. That could be backed up by the citation of a thousand authorities. I want to read to you now from the Kearney case, a case that it happens comes from the State of the distinguished gentleman who has just concluded. I want to read that because of the fact that it makes the point that is my major emphasis in the few minutes allotted to me here today; that is, that a man occupying a position as a State officer, if and when he violates his oath of office, forgets the law that he is sworn to administer, and acts not for but against his principal, the State, he ceases to be an agent of the State, and the State is not responsible for his acts.

The case of Barney v. City of New York (193 U. S. 430) is a case which has been misunderstood and criticized but never overruled. It is still the law. It sets forth a principle of law which, to my mind, is of significant importance in the consideration of the constitutionality of the pending bill. It holds that an officer deriving his power from a State, who acts not only in violation of provisions of the State law but in opposition to plain prohibitions therein, is not as to such acts an agent of the State. In other words, when an officer acts against a State he cannot be said to be acting for the State. Such a person cannot defy a State, trample upon its laws, violate his oath of office and every principle of agency and still bind the State by his illegal conduct. This quotation from the opinion of the Court by Chief Justice Fuller is sufficient to give us the essence:

Thus the bill on its face proceeded on the theory that the construction of the easterly tunnel section was not only not authorized but was forbidden by the legislation, and hence was not action by the State of New York within the intent and meaning of the fourteenth amendment, and the circuit court was right in dismissing it for want of jurisdiction.

Controversies over violations of the laws of New York are controversies to be dealt with by the courts of the State. Complainants' grievance was that the law of the State had been broken, and not a grievance inflicted by action of the legislative or executive or judicial departments of the State; and the principle is that it is for the State courts to remedy acts of State officers done without the authority of or contrary to State laws.

This opinion goes on to quote from Virginia v. Rives (100 U. S. 313):

But when a subordinate officer of the State, in violation of State law, undertakes to deprive an accused party of a right which the statute law accords to him, as in the case at bar, it can hardly be said that he is denied, or cannot enforce, "in the judicial tribunals of the State," the rights which belong to him. * * * If, as in this case, the subordinate officer, whose duty it is to select jurors, fails to discharge that duty in the true spirit of the law; if he excludes all colored men solely because they are colored; or if the sheriff to whom a venire is given, composed of both white and colored citizens, neglects to summon the colored jurors only because they are colored; or if a clerk, whose duty it is to take the 12 names from the box, rejects all the colored jurors for the same reason, it can with no propriety be said the defendant's right is denied by the State, and cannot be enforced in the judicial tribunals. The court will correct the wrong, will quash the indictment or the panel, or, if not, the error will be corrected in a superior court.

Again the opinion in the Barney case quotes from the Civil Rights cases (109 U. S. 3):

In this connection it is proper to state that civil rights, such as are guaranteed by the Constitution against State aggression, cannot be impaired by the wrongful acts of individuals, unsupported by State authority in the shape of laws, customs, or judicial or executive proceedings. The wrongful act of an individual, unsupported by any such authority, is simply a private wrong, or a crime of that individual; an invasion of the rights of the injured party, it is true, whether they affect his person, his property, or his reputation; but if not sanctioned in some way by the State, or not done under State authority, his rights remain in full force and may presumably be vindicated by resort to the laws of the State for redress.

The same opinion points out that the case of Ex parte Virginia (100 U. S. 339) is not in point as an authority against the holding then being made.

Appellant's counsel rely on certain expressions in the opinion in Ex parte Virginia (100 U. S. 339), but that was a case in which what was regarded as the final judgment of a State court was under consideration.

It should be borne in mind also that the action of Judge Coles in filling the jury box in the way he did was approved by the State of Virginia in substance and effect by the State's intervention in the proceeding and suing out of a writ of certiorari, in its own name, in an attempt to justify the judge's actions—the case is known not as Ex parte Coles but as Ex parte Virginia.

This clear distinction between the Barney case and that line of authorities which by the undiscriminating are frequently cited as being in conflict with the decision in the Barney case is simply that the alleged agent, the Board of Rapid Transit Commissioners for New York, under its power delegated by the State of New York, was authorized to build certain tunnels, but not the easterly tunnel section. The building of that section was not only not authorized but was specifically forbidden. So there was no semblance of authority for the construction of the easterly tunnel section. The board did not exercise authority lawfully granted it, and in the exercise exceeded its authority; it violated the law of the State which it was sworn to uphold, and wholly without authority acted in opposition to plain prohibitions of the law by which it was supposed to be governed. Whereas in the case of Ex parte Virginia a judicial officer of that State whose acts in filling the jury box were fully authorized by the State simply exceeded his authority in the performance of his official duty by excluding the names of all Negroes; and apparently this overreaching of his authority by the judge was approved by the State, he was defended in it by the State, and his action was considered as the final judgment of a State court.

Similarly, in the case of Home Telephone Co. v. Los Angeles (227 U. S. 278), while that opinion criticizes the opinion in the Barney case, nevertheless the two cases are not in conflict at all. In the Home Telephone Co. case the State delegated to a commission the right to fix telephone rates, and the commission in the exercise of this authority fixed telephone rates, but the court held that the rates fixed were confiscatory and in violation of the due-process clause of the fourteenth amendment. But Los Angeles, through its officers, had perfect delegated authority to fix the rates. This fact clearly differentiates the Los Angeles case from the principle we are asserting. The same thing is true of the other authorities in this line, Ex parte Young (209 U. S. 123), which was a State railway rate case; Raymond v. Treasurer v. Chicago Union Traction Co. (209 U. S. 20), which was an action of the State board of equalization; Iowa-Des Moines Banks v. Bennett (284 U. S. 239, 246), where the court in explaining its decision again makes clear the distinction between this whole line of authorities and the Barney case:

Here the exaction complained of was made by the treasurer in the name of and for the State in the course of performing his regular duties; the money is retained by the State, and the judicial power of the State has been exerted in justifying the retention.

So the law of the Barney case still holds good and condemns this bill as absolutely unconstitutional; for, of course, every State has antilynching laws, and any peace officer of any State or county or other political subdivision who would fail to protect and defend to the limit of his power any prisoner within his custody would be violating the law of his State and acting in opposition to its plain prohibitions.

There is one case, however, as to which there has been no misunderstanding, and of which there has been no criticism. It was cited with approval recently by the Supreme Court of the United States in Two Hundred and Seventy-first Statutes, at page 639. This case is the Harris case (106 U. S. 629). This case grew out of a lynching in the State of Tennessee, has never been qualified or questioned, and is absolutely decisive against the constitutionality of the pending bill. From the decision of the Court in the Harris case I quote the following exceedingly significant passage:

In the indictment in this case, for instance, which would be a good indictment under the law if the law itself were valid, there is no intimation that the State of Tennessee has passed any law or done any act forbidden by the fourteenth amendment. On the contrary, the gravamen of the charge against the accused is that they conspired to deprive certain citizens of the United States and of the State of Tennessee of the equal protection accorded them by the law of Tennessee.

As, therefore, the section of the law under consideration is directed exclusively against the action of private persons, without reference to the laws of the State or their administration by her officers, we are clear in the opinion that it is not warranted by any clause in the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution.

So the Supreme Court has spoken directly and positively on a lynching case and held that the Federal Government had no authority to enact a law of this character. After quoting many authorities, the Court, in the Harris case, concludes:

These authorities show conclusively that the legislation under consideration finds no warrant for its enactment in the fourteenth amendment.

We might well stop our discussion of the law with this quotation from the Harris case, for it is unanswerable. But there are other cases on the subject of lynching also perfectly in point. The Riggins case (134 Fed. 409), wherein an Alabama judge wrote an opinion setting forth with pre-eminent clarity and ability exactly the same views which the proponents of this bill are voicing today, only to reverse his position and his opinion after the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the Hodges case (203 U. S. 1) had been handed down shortly after the publication of his first opinion in the Riggins case. In the companion case of Powell, Two Hundred and Twelfth United States Reports, page 564, this same Alabama jurist, Judge Jones, upon the strength of the Hodges decision, ordered the indictment against Powell quashed and the defendant discharged. The Government appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States from this decision of Judge Jones, but the Supreme Court upheld Judge Jones, saying that the Hodges case was decisive and that the Federal Government had no power, authority, or jurisdiction in such cases, even though they involved lynching.

These cases render further argument a waste of time on the subject of the constitutionality of this monstrous bill. Now, for a few moments let us consider some of the high points of the Gavagan bill. It plainly seeks to punish officers when the only conceivable power of Congress under the fourteenth amendment—if it had any—would be to punish States. It is State wrongs which Congress is authorized to right. Congress has no more power to punish a State officer who violates State law than it has to punish the chief of police of Mars.

Another outstanding feature of the Gavagan bill is that it provides for the punishment of counties by fines of not less than $2,000 nor more than $10,000 as liquidated damages wholly without regard to the guilt or innocence of the citizens or officials of the counties. If ever any officer of a county had been killed by the mob while the officers were trying to protect a prisoner and if no citizen of the county had participated in the mob, nevertheless, such a county would, under the terms of the Gavagan bill, be fined up to $10,000 if that mob, after killing all the officers of the county, lynched the prisoner. Preposterous, but true. Equally abhorrent is the provision of the Gavagan bill punishing a county wherein a victim is seized by a mob and removed to another county before being lynched. This bill says that such a county, although not one of its officers or citizens knew of the seizure, may be fined up to $10,000.

It so happens that the dearest spot on earth to me, my home county, has had only one lynching within its borders in its long history. There we have 58,000 people living, 14,000 of whom are white. Yet we have no race trouble and no lynchings. The only lynching ever to occur in Dallas County, Ala., took place some 46 years ago, when a mob of infuriated citizens of another county pursued its victim into Dallas County and there lynched him without the knowledge or consent or participation of a single citizen of Dallas County in that crime. Yet, under the terms of the Gavagan bill, Dallas County would have to pay a fine up to $10,000 in such a case.

There are plenty of words condemning lynching, both from the proponents and opponents of this bill. There are none condemning the causes of lynching. I remember the case of Clyde Thomas, who had been a servant in the household of a citizen of Alabama from the time a baby girl was born until she became 16 years of age. He plotted his crime; he prepared the place in a plum thicket. He attempted his crime twice, but was thwarted by the fact that the child had playmates with her. But on the third attempt he raped and killed her. Yet we risked our lives to save him from the noose of the mob for the noose of the law.

After all is said, without any extenuation whatever for the crime of lynching—there can be none—when a guilty man is lynched, the mob has done what the law says should be done. It has done it in an illegal and criminal way, but the end is the same. But no law ever said that a child should be raped. If the proponents of this measure really want to stop crimes of violence, why do they not strike out the seven words in this bill which require that the victim must be taken from the custody of a peace officer and so broaden the scope of the bill to include gangster killings, which disgrace our civilization more often than lynching, and the race riots which are unknown in the South, but in which more victims have been claimed than the number of all the victims of lynching in history?

I repeat that the people of this Nation, through local sentiment, have solved and are utterly eradicating the crime of lynching. The commission of this crime has been reduced more than 5,000 percent—the greatest reduction in history of any crime. It is on the way out. I beg of you gentlemen to remember your oaths to respect, uphold, and maintain the Constitution, and that you will not, by the passage of this prolynching bill, set back the splendid progress which is being made constantly toward the complete wiping out of this disgrace to our civilization. Such unwarranted Federal intrusion into the clearly marked province of the States breeds resentment and kills cooperation. This bill may pass, but without the vestige of constitutional right for its passage. With it the gentleman from New York [Mr. GAVAGAN] and his mob may attempt to lynch the Constitution. But there are many of us who do not joy in any kind of lynching and we will look forward to a vindication of the principles for which we joy to fight.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for 33 minutes.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I respectfully ask the Chair to notify me when I have consumed all but 5 minutes of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be pleased to.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Chairman, here I am, and take a good look at me. I have neither horns, nor a tail, nor cloven feet.

We have run the gamut in this debate of reductio ad absurdum. We have just been treated to a magnificent defense of the opposition to this bill. Something new has been injected by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] when he attacks the procedure by which this bill comes to this House. He calls it illicit, illegal, and unlawful—the gentleman from the great State of Alabama devoted in lip service to democracy attacking one of the fundamental democratic rules of this House urged and propagated by a great Member of this House from Georgia [Mr. Crisp], whose father honored this body as a speaker from the great State of Georgia.

Oh judgment, thou art fled to brutish beasts
And men have lost their reason.

Anything to beat this bill. Never mind the law. Never mind the basic principles of democracy upon which this Nation is founded. Never mind the Constitution. You did not hear a word from him about it. He had two law books and they are still here. He has not broken a page of them.

Mr. Chairman, they have likened me to a conquering military hero who seeks to impress his heel upon a defenseless people. I come of a race of people who for seven centuries—700 years—have fought valiantly, courageously, never surrendering, for liberty, for justice, and for freedom under the law. That is why I am proposing this bill.

I am also attacked by the gentleman from Alabama for seeing eye to eye with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MITCHELL] and the Republican Members of this House. Well, when I am right, when I believe absolutely in the justice, the Americanism and the constitutionality of any proposition proposed, I shall walk humbly with my God, hand in hand with any man who believes as I do. [Applause.]

So much for that. There is no argument against the constitutionality of this bill. Do not be fooled by that. It is all right when they want a cotton-crop increase from the Treasury of the United States for these boys from the South to walk arm in arm with you fellows from the farm sections of the West. That is all right. It brings the people's money into the South. I do not attack you for that, but you dare attack me because I am energetic in asserting my prerogatives as a Member of this House to walk in communion with whom I please when I know I am right and I know they are right.

Mr. Chairman, when I hear some of the bilge that has been spilled on the floor of this House in opposition to this bill and see the official stenographers taking it down, I am reminded of a quotation of the Rubaiyat, by Omar Khayyam, when he exclaims:

The moving finger writes; and, having writ,
Moves on; nor all your piety nor wit
Shall lure it back to cancel half a line,
Nor all your tears wash out a word of it."

When I hear some of my good friends from the South praise me with faint praise, I am reminded of the following quotation from the Rubaiyat:

Indeed, the idols I have loved so long
Have done my credit in this world much wrong;
Have drowned my glory in a shallow cup,
And sold my reputation for a song.

Mr. Chairman, my years of experience as a trial lawyer have taught me to sense when my opponent has a weak case, for invariably he stoops to ridicule, or to one of the meanest forms or devices of debate—an argumentum ad hominem. That is always the weapon of a lawyer whose case is weak. The case of the opposition in connection with this bill is very weak, indeed.

Mr. Chairman, this is not a sectional bill unless it is desired to make it so. It applies to the North, the South, the East, and the West. It is not a Negro bill unless you boys over here wish to make it so, for it applies to all men—be they white, black, red, or yellow—when they are accused of crime, taken into custody, charged with, apprehended by, but always charged with a crime. Why is that necessary? We hear about gang murders in New York. Why, I was born and brought up in New York. I am proud of my city, I am proud of its institutions, and greatly proud of its contribution to the civilization and the advancement of the America I love. If I could reach constitutionally the gangsters of any city—mine or any other city or any other small town—especially down there in Arkansas, where all the racketeers of America go for safekeeping, Hot Springs, Ark., I would do so. I would even put them all in this bill.

Mr. NORRELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GAVAGAN. I cannot yield.

As I stated, I would put them in, but we cannot do that constitutionally. This bill, Mr. Chairman, is predicated mainly upon the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. COLMER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GAVAGAN. I refuse to yield. I have only a little time. None of you have discussed constitutionality, and I want to do that.

Mr. COLMER. That is what I want the gentleman to yield to me on.

Mr. GAVAGAN. I will yield later if I have time. I do not wish to be discourteous. I am sincere in this. If I could place gangsters in this bill and cover them within the purview of the Constitution of the United States, I would do it gladly and willingly, but it cannot be done, because we have not that constitutional power. That is why it cannot be done.

Mr. Chairman, basically this bill is founded upon the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and let me read that amendment so far as its provisions are applicable to this bill:

SECTION 1. Nor shall any State deprive any citizen of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the law.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish the Members would please pay attention to the following:

Sec. 5. The Congress shall have power by appropriate legislation to enforce the provisions of this article.

With the exception of a few other sections of the Constitution you can find no stronger grant of constitutional power to the Congress to deal with this very situation, and they on that side know it. That is why they want to beat this bill in any event and by any means, and do not be fooled.

By implication, as well as by the express mandate of the fifth section of the fourteenth amendment, Congress has not only the power but the duty to protect the rights conferred or guaranteed by the amendment.

The Supreme Court has uniformly held that the National Government has the power, whether expressly given or not, to secure and protect the rights conferred and guaranteed by the Constitution (Strauder v. West Virginia, 100 U. S. 303).

Congress, in the absence of a positive delegation of powers to the State legislatures, may by its own legislation enforce and protect any rights derived from or created by the National Constitution.

In Prigg v. Commonwealth of Pennsylvania (16 Pet., p. 539) Mr. Justice Story said:

That a clause in the Constitution conferring a right should not be so construed as to make it shadowy, or unsubstantial, or leave the citizen without a remedial power adequate for his protection, when another construction equally accordant with the words and the sense in which they were used would enforce and protect the right granted.

Congress is not restricted to legislation for the execution of its expressly granted powers; but, for the protection of rights guaranteed by the Constitution, may employ such means, not prohibited, as are necessary and proper, or such as are appropriate, to attain the ends proposed.

In United States v. Reese (92 U. S. 214) Chief Justice White, at page 217, said:

Rights and immunities created by or dependent upon the Constitution of the United States can be protected by Congress. The form and the manner of the protection may be such as Congress in the legitimate exercise of its legislative discretion shall provide. These may be varied to meet the necessities of the particular right to be protected.

The protection which the Constitution throws around the rights it guarantees is a protection not only against their violations by a State but is an equal protection against individuals acting in any official capacity derived, directly or indirectly, from the State.

A State acts by its legislative, its executive, or its judicial authorities. It can act in no other way. The constitutional provision, therefore, must mean that no agency of the State, or of the officers or agents by whom its powers are exerted, shall deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws. Whoever by virtue of public position under a State government deprives another of property, life, or liberty without due process of law, or denies or takes away the equal protection of the laws, violates the constitutional inhibition; and as he acts in the name and for the State, and is clothed with the State's power, his act is that of the State. This must be so, or the constitutional prohibition has no meaning. Then the State has clothed one of its agents with power to annul or to evade it (Ex parte Virginia, 100 U. S. 339).

In Home Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. City of Los Angeles (227 U. S. 278) the Supreme Court, through Mr. Chief Justice White, said (p. 286):

The provisions of the amendment as conclusively fixed by previous decisions are generic in their terms, are addressed, of course, to the States, but also to every person, whether natural or judicial, who is the repository of State power. By this construction the reach of the amendment is shown to be coextensive with any exercise by a State of power, in whatever form exerted.

In Virginia v. Rives (100 U. S. 313) it was said (p. 318):

It is doubtless true that a State may act through different agencies, either by its legislative, its executive, or its judicial authorities; and the prohibitions of the amendment extend to all action of the State denying equal protection of the laws, whether it be action by one of these agencies or by another. Congress, by virtue of the fifth section of the fourteenth amendment, may enforce the prohibitions whenever they are disregarded by either the legislative, the executive, or the judicial department of the State. The mode of enforcement is left to its discretion. It may secure the right—that is, enforce its recognition—by removing the case from a State court, in which it is denied, into a Federal court, where it will be acknowledged.

In Raymond v. Traction Co. (207 U. S. 20) the Supreme Court said (p. 36):

The provisions of the fourteenth amendment are not confined to the action of the State through its legislature or through the executive or judicial authority. Those provisions relate to and cover all the instrumentalities by which the State acts, and so it has been held that whoever, by virtue of public position under a State government, deprives another of any right protected by the amendment against deprivation by the State violates the constitutional inhibition; and as he acts in the name of the State and for the State, and is clothed with the State's powers, his act is that of the State.

JURY-SERVICE CASE

An actual discrimination against a Negro, on account of his race, by officers entrusted with the duty of carrying out the law, is as potential in creating a denial of equality of rights as a discrimination made by law (Tarrance v. Florida, 188 U. S. 520).

Where statutes on the subject of selection of jurors do not discriminate and do not authorize discrimination against any person for jury service because of race or color, if the executive officers of the courts charged with the duty of executing such statutory provisions, deliberately, in the execution thereof discriminate against Negroes because of their race or color, it would violate the provisions of the fourteenth amendment to the Federal Constitution and would render their action null and void in any case in which such discrimination occurred (Bonaparte v. State, 65 Fla. 287).

Names of Negroes excluded from the jury box—not by legislative fiat but by officers—constitutes violation of the fourteenth amendment (Farrow v. State, 91 Miss. 509).

Fact that no member of the colored race was on grand jury was not violative of the Constitution of the United States unless there was a discrimination against his race by the constitution, statutes, or laws of South Carolina, or in the administration thereof, on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude (State v. Brownfield, 60 S. C. 509; reversed because of no offer of proof of discrimination made, 189 U. S. 426).

Defendant deprived of constitutional rights where court refuses to take evidence in proof of discrimination (Catter v. Texas, 177 U. S. 448).

DENIAL OF EQUAL PROTECTION

Joe Hale v. Commonwealth of Kentucky (writ of certiorari to Court of Appeals of Commonwealth of Kentucky. Supreme Court of United States, October term 1937 (April 11, 1938)): Unconstitutional exclusion of Negroes from juries on account of race. Conviction of Joe Hale for murder upheld in the Court of Appeals of Kentucky. The Supreme Court of the United States, in reversing the decision of the lower court, held:

We are of the opinion that the affidavits, which by the stipulation of the State were to be taken as proof, and were uncontested, sufficed to show a systematic and arbitrary exclusion of Negroes from the jury lists solely because of their race or color, constituting a denial of the equal protection of the laws guaranteed to petitioner by the fourteenth amendment.

DUE PROCESS OF LAW

Nixon v. Cordón, 286 U. S. 73: State of Texas, in an evident attempt to evade the ruling of the Supreme Court in Nixon against Herndon, passed an act empowering the State Democratic committee to set up limitations in primary elections. The committee immediately passed a resolution restricting the primary to white electors. It was contended that as the act of the committee was the act of individuals and not that of the State, neither the fourteenth nor the fifteenth amendments of the Constitution applied, but the Supreme Court of the United States, by Associate Justice Cardozo, declared:

With the problem thus laid bare and its essentials exposed to view, the case is seen to be ruled by Nixon against Herndon. . . . The fourteenth amendment, adopted as it was with special solicitude for the equal protection of members of the Negro race, lays a duty upon the Court to level by its judgment these barriers of color.

Likewise, the provisions and prohibitions of the fourteenth amendment are binding and apply equally to local officers—that is, of counties or local subdivisions of government (Home Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. City of Los Angeles, 227 U. S. 278; Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356).

The provisions of the fourteenth amendment apply to mere matters of administration by local officials, even though the municipal or State law under which they act contains, in itself, no arbitrary discrimination and no denial of due process or equal protection of the laws.

In Tarrance v. Florida (188 U. S. 519), Mr. Justice Brewer, speaking for the Supreme Court, said (p. 520):

The contention of plaintiffs in error is that they were denied the equal protection of the laws by reason of an actual discrimination against their race. The law of the State is not challenged, but its administration is complained of. * * *

Such an actual discrimination is as potential in creating a denial of equality of rights as a discrimination made by law.

Again, in Yick Wo v. Hopkins (118 U. S. 356), an ordinance of the city of San Francisco which made it unlawful to maintain laundries without first having obtained the consent of the board of supervisors, was so administered that Chinamen were denied the right to maintain laundries solely because of their race and nationality. In holding that this administration of the ordinance was violative of the fourteenth amendment, the Supreme Court said (p. 373):

The facts shown establish an administration directed so exclusively against a particular class of persons as to warrant and require the conclusion that whatever may have been the intent of the ordinances as adopted, they are applied by the public authorities charged with their administration, and thus representing the State itself, with a mind so unequal and oppressive as to amount to a practical denial by the State of that equal protection of the laws which is secured to the petitioners, as to all other persons, by the broad and benign provisions of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States. Though the law itself be fair on its face and impartial in appearance, yet if it is applied and administered by public authority with an evil eye and an unequal hand so as practically to make unjust and illegal discriminations between persons in similar circumstances material to their rights, the denial of equal justice is still within the prohibition of the Constitution. This principle of interpretation has been sanctioned by this Court in Henderson v. Mayor of New York (92 U. S. 259), Chy Lung v. Freeman (92 U. S. 725), Ex parte Virginia (100 U. S. 339), Neal v. Delaware (103 U. S. 370), and Soon Hing v. Crowley (113 U. S. 703).

The fact of this discrimination is admitted. No reason for it is shown, and the conclusion cannot be resisted that no reason for it exists except hostility to the race and nationality to which the petitioners belong, and which, in the eye of the law, is not justified. The discrimination is, therefore illegal and the public administration which enforces it is a denial of the equal protection of the laws and a violation of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution. The imprisonment of the petitioners is, therefore, illegal and they must be discharged.

CONSTITUTION COVERS STATE OFFICERS ACTING WITHOUT AUTHORITY

The Supreme Court has consistently sustained the principle that even when a State officer acts without authority of the State or its subdivisions in enforcing an arbitrary discrimination or denial of the equal protection of the laws, his conduct is embraced by the fourteenth amendment and can be dealt with accordingly.

In Neal v. Delaware (103 U. S. 370) it was held that the exclusion, because of their race and color, of citizens of African descent from the grand jury that found, and from the petit jury that was summoned to try, the indictment, if made by the jury commissioners, without authority derived from the constitution and laws of the State, was a violation of the prisoner's rights under the fourteenth amendment, and his motions to quash the indictment and the panels of jurors should have been sustained. The Court, quoting from its earlier opinion in Ex parte Virginia (100 U. S. 339), said (p. 397):

The constitutional provision, therefore, must mean that no agency of the State, or of the officers or agents by whom its powers are executed, shall deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws. Whoever, by virtue of public position under a State government, deprives another of property, life, or liberty without the due process of law, or denies or takes away the equal protection of the laws, violates the constitutional inhibition.

In Virginia v. Rives (100 U. S. 313) the State officer charged with the duty of selecting prospective jurors directly violated the State law prohibiting racial discrimination. The Supreme Court, while acknowledging that the officer had thereby made himself punishable at the instance of the State, went on to say that nevertheless "his act was the act of the State and was prohibited by the constitutional amendment" (p. 321).

A striking illustration of this principle occurs in Home Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. City of Los Angeles (227 U. S. 278). There the State Constitution of California contained guaranties of due process and equal protection of the laws identical with those in the fourteenth amendment. Certain municipal officers, in their administration of a local ordinance, were guilty of arbitrary discrimination. Notwithstanding that their acts violated the constitution of their own State, the Supreme Court held that their action could be nullified and corrected through the Federal courts, acting under the fourteenth amendment, without waiting for a State court to declare that their acts also violated the State constitution.

BARNEY CASE OVERRULED

The Supreme Court declared that inasmuch as local officers were acting or purporting to act "by virtue of public position" their conduct was embraced by the fourteenth amendment. The Court took occasion, in effect, to overrule (p. 294) its earlier decision in the case of Barney v. City of New York (193 U. S. 430) that where the local officer's act was forbidden by State statute it could not be said to be the act of the State within the meaning of the fourteenth amendment. The Supreme Court, speaking by Chief Justice White, expressly rejected the proposition that "the terms of the fourteenth amendment reached only the acts done by State officers which are within the scope of the power conferred by the State" and said that on the contrary (p. 287):

The settled construction of the amendment is that it presupposes the possibility of an abuse by a State officer or representative of the powers possessed and deals with such a contingency. It provides, therefore, for a case where one who is in possession of State power uses that power to the doing of the wrongs which the amendment forbids, even although the consummation of the wrong may not be within the powers possessed, if the commission of the wrong itself is rendered possible or is efficiently aided by the State authority lodged in the wrongdoer. That is to say, the theory of the amendment is that where an officer or other representative of a State in the exercise of the authority with which he is clothed misuses the power possessed to do a wrong forbidden by the amendment, inquiry concerning whether the State has authorized the wrong is irrelevant, and the Federal judicial power is competent to afford redress for the wrong by dealing with the officer and the result for his exertion of power.

So, likewise, in Ex parte Virginia (100 U. S. 339) it was urged that Judge Coles, who had kept men off the jury for no other reason than that they were colored, was not acting on behalf of the State but was acting against the State, and, therefore, his act was not that of the State. The Supreme Court held otherwise, ruling that his action was not a private act but one made in the course of official conduct and by virtue of his public position.

Denial of due process, or the equal protection, of the laws may be accomplished by nonaction quite as well as by action.

A public official may, by negation, violate the constitutional safeguards against discrimination and the guaranty of due process.

Hence, inaction or nonaction of a State officer is reached by the provisions of the fourteenth amendment as much so as if he acted positively and directly. Indeed, the nonaction of an officer is as much the act of the State as the direct and positive act of the officer and may be reached under the fourteenth amendment by appropriate legislation by Congress. Otherwise the fourteenth amendment may be nullified in any State by wholesale nonaction of the State or local officers.

This bill is expressly limited by its own definitions to official action or nonaction resulting in the denial of due process or the equal protection of the laws. It applies only to persons injured or killed through mob violence with the purpose or consequence of depriving the victim of due process of law or the equal protection of the laws where such person was suspected, accused, or convicted of any crime or offense or in the custody of any peace officer.

In other words, this bill does not seek to reach all cases of assault or murder through violence or all cases in which human rights have been denied or destroyed by public anarchy. It in no sense attempts to set up a Federal criminal code in the several States or to give to the Federal Government a regulatory, supervisory, or concomitant power in connection with the administration of the criminal laws of the State. It deals only with those instances where the personal rights guaranteed to all American citizens by the fourteenth amendment have been invaded by mob violence with the active concurrence or through the nonaction of State or local officers, or where such rights cannot, by reason of local conditions, be properly vindicated in the local courts.

CONGRESS POSSESSES POLICE POWER

The fourteenth amendment not only prohibits certain action or nonaction by the several States through local officers but also, by necessary implication, confers upon and guarantees to every American citizen certain rights which the Congress may protect by all appropriate means in the exercise of plenary police power.

In a proper sphere, Congress possesses a Federal police power quite as complete as any police power possessed by the States.

In Hope v. United States (227 U. S. 308), speaking expressly of the power of Congress over interstate transportation, the Supreme Court said (p. 323):

The power is complete in itself, and Congress, as an incident to it, may adopt not only means necessary but convenient to its exercise, and the means may have the quality of police regulations.

In Gibbons v. Ogden (9 Wheat.) Chief Justice Marshall said (p. 202):

It is obvious that the Government of the Union in the exercise of its express powers * * * may use means that may also be employed by a State in the exercise of its acknowledged powers.

In Hamilton v. Kentucky Distillers Co. (251 U. S. 146) the Supreme Court said:

When the United States asserts any of the powers conferred upon it by the Constitution, no valid objection can be based upon the fact that such exercise may be attended by the same incidents which attend the exercise by a State of its police power, or that it may tend to accomplish a similar purpose.

THE RECIPROCAL DUTY OF THE STATES UNDER THE FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT SUSTAINS THE CONSTITUTIONALITY OF THE ANTI-LYNCHING BILL

The fourteenth amendment is as much the law of the separate States as it is of the United States. The individual rights which it confers upon and guarantees to American citizens are rights existing under the law of the land and hence are rights entitled to recognition and protection by the law and jurisprudence of the several States.

By ratifying the fourteenth amendment the several States have bound themselves to perform and discharge the duty of affording to all persons within their respective boundaries the equal protection of the laws, and the Federal Government has guaranteed this performance. The duty to perform is a positive, affirmative duty of equal protection.

Wherever this duty is not performed, regardless of the excuse, there is a breach by the State of the contract, and the obligation falls on the guarantor, the Federal Government, to assure performance and to redress whatever wrongs have been suffered by reason of the breach of the guaranty. In the case of private corporations, it is well settled that where an obligation rests upon such corporation as a positive duty in favor of third persons, the failure of an officer or agent to discharge that duty is actionable, even though the failure may have been merely an incident of wrongful conduct on the part of the officer or agent for which the corporation is in no way responsible as a principal. In other words, the rule is well established that where misconduct or nonaction of an agent causes a breach of the obligation or contract of a principal there the principal will be liable in an action, whether such misconduct or nonaction be willful, malicious, or merely negligent; and the form of the action, though undeniably in tort, is treated virtually as an action in contract and governed by the same rule of damages.

The analogy seems obvious. If State or local officers may in one sense be regarded as acting outside of their employment or authority in not preventing a lynching, nevertheless, such conduct may constitute a neglect or default on the part of the State to afford the equal protection of the law. Against such neglect or default Congress is authorized by the fourteenth amendment to adopt all appropriate remedial measures in order to vindicate and protect the rights possessed by all American citizens under that amendment. Such action by Congress is in no way an invasion of State rights but should be welcomed by the States as an additional protection to fundamental privileges which they, too, are equally bound to guarantee.

CONGRESS HAS THE POWER AND DUTY UNDER THE CONSTITUTION TO GUARANTEE A REPUBLICAN FORM OF GOVERNMENT WITHIN THE STATES

The right to due process of law and the equal protection of the laws are fundamental conceptions of justice and inherent in the very idea of republican or free government. In Powell v. Alabama (287 U. S. 45) the Supreme Court, quoting from its earlier decision in Holden v. Hardy (169 U. S. 366, 389), said, concerning the right to due process of law and the equal protection of the laws (p. 372):

There are certain immutable principles of justice which are inherent in the very idea of free government which no member of the Union may disregard.

In United States v. Cruikshank (92 U. S. 542) the Supreme Court said (p. 555):

The equality of the rights of citizens is a principle of republicanism. Every republican government is in duty bound to protect all its citizens in the enjoyment of this principle if within its power. That duty was originally assumed by the States, and it still remains there. The only obligation resting upon the United States is to see that the States do not deny the right.

Obviously the substitution of mob rule for free government and the obstruction of the immutable rights of private citizens by mob violence, where the objective or consequence is the overthrow of due process of law or the equal protection of the law, is a violation of the right of the injured citizen to enjoy the advantages and privileges of a republican form of government. In the exercise of the police power expressly conferred upon Congress to preserve the republican form of government in the several States and to vindicate the right of the private citizens thereof to enjoy the protection of free government, Congress may enact all appropriate remedial measures and may set up machinery for the enforcement thereof by the Federal courts.

Such police measures may obviously be both preventive and remedial—may seek to prevent a destruction of constitutional rights by the substitution of mob rule for free government and may provide remedies for wrongs suffered by reason of such substitution.

THE PROVISIONS OF THE BILL FOR PENALIZING A COUNTY WHERE A LYNCHING OCCURS ARE CONSTITUTIONAL

The policy of imposing liability upon a civil subdivision of government is familiar to the common law. A State may, in the exercise of its police power, impose absolute liability upon a city to be collected by an injured individual (City of Chicago v. Sturges, 222 U. S. 313). In the earliest English statutes there are repeated instances of communities being fined or mulcted in damages for robberies and assaults occurring in their midst, the theory being that the taxpayers would in consequence hold their local officials to greater vigilance (Reeves' History of English Law, vol. II, p. 340; Coke, 2 Inst., ch. 17, p. 369; 31 N. Y. 189, 62 Ohio State 318, 333, 340).

A recent application of these principles in an identical case is to be found in People v. Nelliss (249 Ill. 12). There a statute of Illinois imposed against a county where a lynching occurred the sum of $5,000 as damages recoverable by the victim's heirs. In upholding the validity of this statute the Supreme Court of Illinois said (p. 19):

It is, we think, too clear for argument that those provisions of said act which provide that persons engaging in mob violence shall be guilty of a felony and subject to imprisonment in the penitentiary will tend to prevent men from joining mobs when assembling and will tend to the suppression of mob violence, and it is, we think, equally clear that the imposing of a liability for damages upon the county or city in favor of the victim of a mob whenever mobs are permitted to assemble, or, in the case of his death, in favor of his widow or heirs or adopted children, will cause the taxpayers of such county or city to discourage the assembling of mobs within such municipalities and will cause all law-abiding men residing in such communities to condemn and denounce mob violence, the result of which must be to create respect for the law and its enforcement and to discourage the assembling of mobs.

The Constitution is the supreme law of the land, binding upon Congress and every State legislature, Governor, or municipality in the 48 States of this Union. It is supreme in the American concept of government; and when the State fails to enforce the provisions of this fourteenth amendment, it is our duty to compel enforcement. Some of them have said, perhaps in ridicule—but their ridicule nor faint praise concerns me not—that this bill was expertly drawn. That is quite a concession for a bill sponsored by a kid from the sidewalks of New York.

Expertly drawn? Of course it is. I admit it, and keenly drawn to make it constitutional, for I stood in this Well like you, and you, and held up my hand to support the Constitution of the United States and to defend it. I do not intend to violate that oath or any other oath; if I were not sure in my heart and mind that this bill is constitutional I would not be here urging it, and they would not be here urging its defeat, for they know it is constitutional. Why, to hear them talk you would think the States could do as they pleased, willy-nilly, to the Constitution.

Now, there is another provision of the Constitution that makes this bill constitutional. The Constitution itself now places upon the Federal Government and the Congress the duty to see to it that a republican form of government exists within the various States of this Union. It is our constitutional duty to guarantee to every State in this Union a republican form of government. Do you mean to tell me that when a jail is broken into and a prisoner taken out by a mob that that is a republican form of government; that that is due process of law and equal protection of the law? Why, you know in your hearts it is not. This is why they fear passing this bill on to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Ladies and gentlemen of the House of Representatives, I have, I hope, satisfied you as to the constitutionality of this legislation. I believe with all reasonable certainty that the Supreme Court of the United States would sustain its constitutionality. I submit that, after all, we sit as the legislative branch of the Government. We have no right or power to declare our own enactments unconstitutional. That power is vested in the Supreme Court; but before that Court can act, we must pass legislation. We have seen the Supreme Court uphold the constitutionality of the Gold Clause Act, the Labor Relations Act, and sundry other acts which a generation or so ago no zealous lawyer could prophesy. Every one of you who are lawyers when in school studying constitutional law had drilled into your minds the declaration of the great Chief Justice Marshall:

"That the power to tax was the power to destroy." This was an axiom of constitutional law for over a century, yet recently a Justice of that same Court declared that axiom to be "a seductive cliché," and the Court forthwith reversed the decision of Chief Justice Marshall and declared for the principle of reciprocal taxation of the agencies of Federal and State governments.

In view of this state of affairs, I ask any honest lawyer, How can you dare stand here and proclaim ex cathedra, if you will, that this bill is unconstitutional? Pass this bill; leave it to the Court to decide any honest doubts you may have as to its constitutionality. That is your duty, and in its performance you give assurance to America and to the world that the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States proscribes Judge Lynch and mob rule and declares for government under law; for justice as enunciated by our courts; for trial by jury of all persons charged with crime, irrespective of race, creed, or color. That is the constitutional way; that is the American way; that is the divine way. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired. All time has expired. The Clerk will read. The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of this act are enacted in exercise of the power of Congress to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provisions of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States and for the purpose of better assuring by the several States under said amendment equal protection and due process of law to all persons charged with or suspected or convicted of any offense within their jurisdiction.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOFFMAN: Page 1, line 10, change the period to a comma and add the following: "and for the purpose of securing equal protection and due process of law to all persons who have not been suspected of, charged with, nor convicted of any criminal offense."

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York makes the point of order that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan is not germane to the bill. Does the gentleman from Michigan desire to be heard on the point of order? The Chair is prepared to rule.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I was prepared to be heard on the point of order, Mr. Chairman, but inasmuch as the Chair is prepared to rule, I shall omit any argument, as in the end I shall have to accept the ruling of the Chair anyway.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. Any assemblage of three or more persons which exercises or attempts to exercise by physical violence and without authority of law any power of correction or punishment over any citizen or citizens or other person or persons in the custody of any peace officer or suspected of, charged with, or convicted of the commission of any offense, with the purpose or consequence of preventing the apprehension or trial or punishment by law of such citizen or citizens, person or persons, shall constitute a "mob" within the meaning of this act. Any such violence by a mob which results in the death or maiming of the victim or victims thereof shall constitute "lynching" within the meaning of this act: Provided, however, That "lynching" shall not be deemed to include violence occurring during the course of picketing or boycotting or any incident in connection with any "labor dispute" as that term is defined and used in the act of March 23, 1932 (47 Stat. 70).

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 12, after the word "act", strike out the colon and insert a period and strike out all of lines 13, 14, 15, 16, and 17.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane and I would like to be heard upon that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would be very glad to hear the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I only make this point of order because of the ruling just made by the Chair on the amendment which I offered extending the protection of this bill to persons who had not been suspected of, charged with, or convicted of a crime. If the former ruling was correct and the amendment I offered not germane, it would seem that the amendment now offered is not germane. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment which brings within the provisions of this bill all of those described incidents which arise during the course of a labor dispute. If the previous ruling of the Chair was correct, and, of course, I assume that it was, we now find this amendment subjecting to the provisions of the bill those who permit a mob to lynch or maim individuals during the course of a labor dispute, which was a thing that I intended to bring about by an amendment I had prepared.

A moment ago I tried to extend the protection of the bill by the amendment I offered to those persons who had neither been suspected of, charged with, nor convicted of an offense, and the Chair held that that amendment was not germane.

Germane is defined to be "in close relationship," "appropriate," "pertinent." Can it be said that an amendment to a bill, the effect of which extends that protection to persons who have not been so suspected, charged, or convicted of an offense is not pertinent to the purpose expressed in the title? The amendment which I previously offered but included in the purpose of the law those who had not been so charged with, suspected, or convicted.

If the purpose of the bill is, as stated in the title, to assure to persons within the jurisdiction of the States due process of law and equal protection of the laws, then certainly it is "appropriate" to extend that protection to all persons within the jurisdiction of the law, regardless of their status before the law.

The subject under consideration is that of assuring to persons within the jurisdiction of the States due process of law and equal protection of the laws. My amendment but extended this due process and equal protection to an additional group of citizens. How then can it be said that it is not germane to the bill?

The objection of the gentleman from New York that my amendment was not in order because it was not germane means simply that the proposed amendment is a proposition upon a subject different from that under consideration. That is the meaning of the point of order he raised, according to a ruling of Speaker Carlisle on March 17, 1880.

That an amendment be germane means that it must be akin to or relevant to the subject matter of the bill. * * * The purpose of the rule is to prevent hasty and ill-considered legislation; to prevent propositions being presented for the consideration of the body which might not reasonably be anticipated.

Such was the holding of Chairman John J. Fitzgerald on September 22, 1914.

Recent holdings are to the effect that, if the purpose of the amendment be germane to the purpose of the bill, it is not subject to objection (8 Haines, 2911).

Now, by the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York, all of those incidents of violence which—by the proviso inserted in the second paragraph were exempted from the protection given by the bill—if they arose during the course of a labor dispute are brought within the protection of the bill. With the purpose of the amendment I agree, but my point is, that if the amendment which I offered to include within the protection of the bill persons who had not been suspected of, charged with, or convicted of a crime, was not germane, it logically follows that it is not germane to bring within the provisions of the bill those who are injured by violence during the course of a labor dispute, even though that protection be limited to those suspected of, charged with, or convicted of a crime, and denied to the citizen whose conduct has never been questioned.

If the amendment which I offered to extend the protection of the bill to the law-abiding citizen was not germane, then I submit that this amendment, which extends the protection of the bill to those injured during a strike, is not germane.

Notwithstanding the previous ruling of the Chair, to which I submit, I still contend that the amendment that I offered was germane and anticipate a ruling by the Chairman that the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York is germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule. In the opinion of the Chair there is a clear distinction between the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan and the amendment which is pending at the present time. The Chair does not feel it is necessary to state in detail the distinction which exists. It is the opinion of the Chair that the distinction is plain and apparent. The amendment offered by the gentleman from New York strikes out the proviso found on page 2 of the bill, in lines 13 to 17, and it subjects to the provisions of the pending bill, if it becomes law, certain offenses which the proviso seeks to eliminate. The amendment of the gentleman from New York is clearly distinct from the one offered by the gentleman from Michigan. The amendment is clearly germane to the bill and the Chair overrules the point of order.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, strike out all of lines 1 to 9, inclusive, and down to the word "any" in line 10 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Any assemblage of three or more persons which exercise, or attempts to exercise, physical violence without authority of law over any citizen or citizens or other person or persons shall constitute a mob within the meaning of this act."

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, this is the so-called gangster amendment. The purpose of this amendment is to include in this bill such offenses as are known as gang murders. This amendment, if adopted, together with the perfecting amendment which I propose to offer if it is adopted, will mean that the bill will not be a sectional bill. The gentleman from New York [Mr. GAVAGAN] has said he did not want a sectional bill. It will mean that the crime of gang murder will be recognized just as much as that of lynching.

I do not know why this amendment should not be adopted. We have heard many statements made to the effect that this was not a sectional bill; that the objective of this bill was to protect innocent people, in order that they might receive due process of law and have their day in court. Then why not let it apply to gang murders as well as to lynching?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLMER. My time is very limited.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for an additional 5 minutes at the expiration of my time in order that I may yield to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. COLMER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Is not the real purpose of the gentleman's amendment to load down this bill so much that it will sink?

Mr. COLMER. Well, I would not say that. I would say, however, that the gentleman ought to be satisfied since the matter in which he is particularly interested will be stricken out of the bill.

We all know what this bill is. We all know that this bill is political in its inception and that it has no place upon the floor of this House.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I raise a point of order. The gentleman is not proceeding in order. Under the rules the gentleman must speak on his amendment. He is now making a political speech.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York makes a point of order. The Chair has been following with interest the remarks of the gentleman from Mississippi. The Chair feels that the gentleman from Mississippi is clearly within his rights. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield for the purpose of a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. COLMER. If my colleague insists upon it, I will yield.

Mr. RANKIN. I just wanted to ask if there was any man in the House, except the gentleman from New York [Mr. GAVAGAN], who did not know that this was a political bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that that is not the subject of a parliamentary inquiry. The gentleman from Mississippi will proceed.

Mr. COLMER. With the permission of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN], I would like to answer the parliamentary inquiry. I do not see why the gentleman from New York [Mr. GAVAGAN] should be excepted. [Laughter.]

Now, what have we here? We have the old antilynching bill trotted out in an election year. This is nothing new. This is the same old story. It arises practically every time this Congress meets, and never does it fail in an election year. It means something to some people in this House. Let me say to those who are most concerned that I am reminded of a little story. We are all interested in the gentleman. We want to see a Democrat represent the great Harlem district here; but one time there was a lawyer who went on a vacation, and he left his prospective son-in-law in charge of his office. When he returned, after a long vacation, he asked the boy what had been done. The boy showed him that a will case that had been pending there for 15 years, from which the old gentleman had been making his living all during that time, had been disposed of. The old gentleman said, "Young man, you will never make a lawyer. You will never be able to support my daughter, because you have disposed of the most lucrative piece of business that we have ever had."

I hope the gentleman from New York will not insist upon the passage of this bill, because thereby he will dispose of the most potent argument that he has to maintain his seat in this House. [Laughter.] I do not know why the gentleman should insist upon this. I do not know why he should even oppose my amendment. I do not know that he will. I hope that he will not.

If he had wanted to stop the murder of citizens, regardless of race or status in society, he would have made such a provision in the bill in the first instance. The gentleman from New York says by opposing this that he thinks that it is all right for gangsters to engage in the nefarious business of robbing and murdering, but it is all wrong for an outraged citizenship to commit a lynching. The only difference between the gentleman from New York and myself is that I think they are both wrong.

But let us analyze the gentleman's unusual and untenable attitude in this matter. Let us see why it is that the great crusader, who has the distinction of representing the Harlem district in this great body, is unwilling to include gangsters. Surely murder in whatever form it takes place is murder. Why does the gentleman draw a distinction? Why does he spend his entire efforts in Congress upon his futile and pet measure of an antilynching bill? And at the same time he says by his action that he does not think that gangsters and the citizens and officers who permit gangsters to operate should likewise be penalized. Surely no one in this House—certainly not I—would charge the gentleman with any ulterior motives. Who in this House, for instance, would be so brazen and so bold as to point out that there have been many gang murders committed in New York, while there have been no citizens of Harlem lynched? What Member of this House would have the temerity to suggest that the gentleman from New York was so interested in his constituency that he did not want to see any of them, regardless of the crime committed, penalized and feel the prod of the Federal law for an offense as heinous and hideous as a gang murder?

As has been repeatedly pointed out on this floor in the last few days, there have been a total of three lynchings in this country during the year 1939; while in the city of New York alone there were 272 homicides committed during the year 1938—the last figures available. If the gentleman is interested in preventing murder, why does the gentleman take the time of the Congress so futilely in forcing on this body the consideration of a bill which would only affect a very bagatelle, a negligible number of homicides? There was one lynching for every 45,000,000 Americans in the United States last year while there was one homicide for every 100,000 persons in New York State alone. Then why all of the hullabaloo by the great crusader from Harlem? Why should 3 days of this House be consumed in the consideration of a piece of legislation of this type, dealing with a nonexistent problem—a negligible thing? Why should the Congress be held in session possibly for a month or more this summer when everyone is anxious to go home, and when the country wants to see Congress adjourn, with a filibuster—which will surely happen in the Senate preventing adjournment? Why, I ask?

Why should every Member of this House with a few Negro voters be placed upon the political "hot spot"? Why this attempt to ravage the Constitution? No one knows better than the gentleman who is pressing this bill that it is unconstitutional, because he has made a study of it. Who will answer these questions? Are we driven—driven reluctantly, but nevertheless driven—to the conclusion that there might be some politics involved in this? Certainly I should be the last person in this House to accuse anyone of playing politics with a matter as sacred as the question of the Constitution of the United States, which we have all sworn to uphold and to defend. Did I hear someone suggest that a large portion of the constituency of the gentleman who continuously presses this bill belongs to that race of people previously occupying a position of servitude in the country? Certainly no one would be bold enough—and least of all would I—to suggest that this is a political football, which, like Banquo's ghost, is caused to arise ever so often when Congress convenes—and always in an election year.

But I said that I would not raise any question of politics; that I would refrain from injecting such an undeserved, inappropriate, and unwelcome charge. But since the question has been raised, it is not difficult to visualize a recurrence of what happened on a former occasion. Of course, this bill will pass the House. It might not pass the House if the political angle were removed. But it will pass—we all know that. And I think I can see again the great champion of Harlem, the great crusader, the plumed knight of the black people, as he rides into Harlem for another ovation. I can see him in my mind's eye as the plumed knight, sitting astride a great white steed, himself all bedecked and robed in white, an emblem of purity, as he heads a gigantic parade through the streets of Harlem. I can see the smile of satisfaction as it spreads gently over his benign countenance. The bands in great numbers head a long procession of the beloved constituents of Harlem. And now they strike up a lively tune, the Sidewalks of New York. The great crusader and champion of the oppressed rides happily at the head of the procession, graciously bowing and waving to the great, protected throngs of Harlemites as they spill the confetti from the windows and housetops like a January snow, in tribute to their great leader and defender.

All honor to the champion of Harlem.

All hail the great white chieftain of the black man. [Applause.]

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLMER. I am sorry, but my time has expired.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I say to the gentleman from Mississippi that I will treat his remarks with the contempt they deserve. I will, however, read to the gentleman a little clipping from the Washington Post this morning, the last paragraph on page 8, about the present doings in the gentleman's own State. Do not forget, I was chivalrous enough in my argument not to mention it, but since he has extended his argument on his amendment to that reductio ad absurdum and made that argumentum ad hominem I spoke about, I will read this clipping:

While the House debated the antilynching bill National Guardsmen were on duty in Prentiss, Miss., to prevent what local officers feel might develop into a lynching. Crowds gathered menacingly for the arraignment of two Negroes charged with killing a police officer.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi is an attempt to load down this bill with unconstitutional provisions, an attempt to defeat this bill, and let the mob go to work. I hope this amendment will be defeated.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GAVAGAN. I refuse to yield.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. POAGE. I yield to my distinguished friend from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. Answering the gentleman from New York, I have just read into the RECORD the statement that the National Guard went down there and protected those Negroes at the expense of the State. If it had been a gang murder in New York, they would have got no protection. [Applause.]

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to let this opportunity pass without saying just one word. I have no desire to impugn anyone's motive because I do not believe there is anyone in this House whose motives are not high and proper in connection with this bill. [Applause.] I do believe, however, that there is a great deal of misunderstanding about this problem. I feel that just as the heathen people of old offered human sacrifices to pagan gods, so we today are planning to offer sacrifices of human beings on the altar of the great god of ignorance when we pass legislation that is bound to stop and reverse all the progress that has been made during the past 75 years toward stamping out the deplorable practice of lynching.

Those of you who have never seen a lynching are hardly in a position to speak with much understanding today. It has been my sorrow to have seen with my own eyes while I was but a schoolboy the bodies of human beings dragged down the pavements of at least one southern city, later to be burned on the public square. I think I know something of the motives that actuated the people who did these things, and their feelings and passions were not of the kind that can be held in check by the threat of penalty to their officers or their counties. I know that the procedure now being followed is not calculated to prevent a recurrence of those things that I saw so long ago. I would regret, just as sincerely as any man on this floor, a recurrence in my State of these horrible scenes.

I know that for many years we in the Southland have made an honest and sincere effort to do everything within our power to wipe out the blot of lynching and to prevent the conditions that bring mobs into existence. Do not call upon us now to turn back. Do not now call upon our peace officers, who have so often and so bravely protected the black man as well as the white, to run away from a scene where some poor Negro boy is accused of a heinous crime. Today my sheriff will go and get that boy, put him in jail, and do everything possible to protect him, and the peace officers all over the South have shown by actual action that they do and will go the full length to protect the poorest Negro. But you pass this bill, and the sheriff of my county will be, just like the sheriff of your county, somewhere else when a group of people, actuated by whatever motives, acting in ignorance—yes, but acting nevertheless—gathers to take the life of some Negro boy, whether he be guilty or innocent of the crime charged. Pass this bill and the mob will then take his life without interference on the part of any officer. For then no officer will take the accused into custody. This bill says that it is not a lynching if the mob beats the sheriff to the victim, but he will be just as dead as if the sheriff had taken him into custody before the mob got him, and if the sheriff had taken him in custody, his life would probably have been saved. Today there is protection as far as it is humanly possible to give it by the law-enforcement officials of the South, but pass this bill and there will be no protection at all to those Negro boys who are charged with certain crimes.

Mr. Chairman, may I say just one more thing to my colleagues? Do not let your ignorance of affairs in another section of the country induce you to take action that might be exactly proper in your section—and I do not pass judgment upon that—but which will tear down the good work of generations in other communities. I speak as one who has seen these things, one who has lived among these conditions. I speak as one who knows the problem, because it has been at my front door. I know, and this is indisputable, that we have made great progress toward wiping out something that we want to wipe out just as sincerely as anybody else does. Lynchings are now almost a thing of the past all over this country. There were only three in all the 48 States in 1939. Leave us alone. Let the South carry on the noble work our people have thus far so nobly advanced. Do not let your self-satisfaction and belief that you know how to run the other fellow's business cause you to offer human sacrifices on the altar of ignorance. We in the South will make lynchings but an evil memory if you of other sections will but quit injecting discontent and misunderstanding into the relations between the races. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I desire to include in my remarks an editorial taken from yesterday morning's Washington Post, which shows how inevitable it is that the motives of uninformed zealots will be harshly judged by those who have not had the privilege of personal acquaintanceship as we have had here in the House.

ANTILYNCHING POLITICS

Politics inevitably intrudes into a congressional session preceding a general election. Every action that is taken is likely to be considered from the viewpoint of its political effect. But that does not justify the injection of mere time-wasting political gestures into a session that is confronted by more urgent legislation than it can hope to enact.

The antilynching bill taken up by the House yesterday must be placed in this category. It has previously passed the House, only to be killed by filibuster in the Senate. There can scarcely be any doubt that the bill would encounter a similar fate if it should be passed by the House and again submitted to the Senate for debate. To avoid another filibuster and serious disruption of their legislative program, Senate leaders would probably pigeonhole the bill.

There is no reason, moreover, for pressing the bill at this time. A few years ago, when the barbarous practice of lynching persons suspected of crime was common in the South, a plausible case could be made for some sort of Federal interference. Now lynching has virtually disappeared. Every State, except Mississippi and Florida, had a clear record in 1939 so far as this dastardly crime is concerned. And in those two States only three lynchings were reported.

With the problem thus narrowed to two States, there is no excuse whatever for the enactment of an antilynching bill that would violate the constitutional division of powers between the Federal Government and the States. Indeed, the proposal of Federal penalties for State officials who fail to do their duty was never acceptable. It presumes to exercise a power which the Constitution denies to the Federal Government. Failure of a few States adequately to protect their own citizens, inexcusable though it is, does not justify such a gross encroachment upon their constitutional rights.

When such cogent objections to the bill are added to the fact that the States have almost completed the task of putting their own houses in order, no reasonable excuse is left for reviving the antilynching bill in Congress. Regardless of what action the House may take, the bill will doubtless remain a dead letter. Yet some legislators insist on reviving it in an election year in the hope of winning votes.

The issue, of course, is not lynching. That outrageous and uncivilized practice is condemned by almost every Member of Congress. With the current improvement in State law enforcement, it will doubtless soon be wiped out. The question by which the House is confronted is whether one group of legislators shall be permitted to make political capital out of this general hatred of lynching to the detriment of a crowded legislative program.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. McCORMACK). The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLMER].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. COLMER) there were—ayes 53, noes 105.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, one of the advocates of this bill stated in debate yesterday that he received a letter from the county of Oglethorpe, Ga., in which a large number of Negroes had joined in asking him to request the Department of Justice to investigate conditions of peonage in that county. He said they asked him not to reveal their names, that if he did so their lives would be taken by a mob.

There is no section of the South where Negroes are treated better or are more generally contented than in Oglethorpe County.

I lived in that county from 1901 to 1920. I began my profession as a lawyer there. At one time I knew practically every citizen in the county, and I have been in close touch with these people since moving to an adjoining county where I now live. I own and control approximately 3,000 acres of land, scattered over the county. I have never known better people in my life. This county has produced as many great men as any other county in the United States, and many Governors and prominent and successful men in every walk of life have been residents of this county. Every citizen can get justice in the county. There are no better peace officers anywhere. I recall the first case I was employed in, after I was admitted to the bar, was by a Negro man charged with rape, or rather an attempt to rape. The jury was composed of 12 splendid white men and he was acquitted. He was given a fair trial and was acquitted because he was innocent. Defendants charged with this unspeakable crime may not only have trials, but if they are innocent they have always been and will always be acquitted.

The information from those whose names are not revealed does not speak the truth of the situation in this good county. The people there do not deserve the insinuation and reflection cast upon them by this letter. [Applause.]

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer a preferential motion. The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. RANKIN moves that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to speak for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, bringing this so-called anti-lynching bill in here at this time is one of the most ridiculous performances ever witnessed in the Congress of the United States, and one of which the American people, your constituents, have every reason to be ashamed. It is the old story of Nero's fiddling while Rome burned.

Seldom in the history of this country has there been a greater need for the exercise of statesmanship in this House. We are confronted with problems of grave importance to the people of the Nation and of the world; and yet this Congress, or the House of Representatives, is wasting its time on a vicious, stupid measure that everybody knows will never become a law.

Is that statesmanship? Is it the part of wise men to thus disregard the welfare of the Nation, only to stir up strife and discontent? You Members who are pushing this vicious measure are doing your country the greatest injury of which you are capable.

On yesterday I listened to the address of the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], in which he pointed out the fallacy of this measure and the impossibility of its enforcement. He and I do not agree on the great fundamental questions that separate the two national parties, but I want to pay my tribute to him as the outstanding member of the Republican Party in public life today. He is the best friend the Negroes have on the Republican side, because he is willing to tell them the unvarnished truth, and to openly oppose a measure that he knows would do them more harm than good. He is by far the ablest member of the Republican Party in the House. He is honest, courageous, and patriotic; and if the Republican Party is really interested in the welfare of the country, they can find no abler, no more worthy leader among the regular Republicans of the Nation as their candidate for President in 1940 than the distinguished gentleman from New York, JAMES W. WADSWORTH. [Applause.]

This bill that you have dragged out here, by petition, and that a self-respecting committee of the House refused to report, should never be referred to as an anti-lynching bill. It should be called "a bill to encourage rape and to reelect GAVAGAN to Congress." It is nothing but a vicious attack upon the white people of the Southern States, and is fostered by a communistic element that has brought sufficient pressure to bear to force it to the floor of the House through the signatures of men who did not have the courage to resist that pressure.

I am going to speak plainly to you today, and especially to you Members on the Democratic side who are indulging in this nauseating spectacle. You are not only offending the white people of the Southern States, but you are proving yourselves to be the worst enemies the Negroes of this country have in public life. You are stirring up trouble for them and deeply offending Members from the South upon whose good will you must depend, not only for your committee assignments in the House, but for the success of any legislation you may sponsor.

Remember that southern Democrats now have the balance of power in both Houses of Congress. By your conduct you may make it impossible for us to support many of you for important committee assignments, and other positions to which you may aspire. The people you represent did not send you here to become the willing tools of a few Negro agitators and to engage in these offensive and useless attacks upon us. They may call you to account in the primary; they may want to know why you disregard their interests in order to serve a few Negro politicians.

The same thing applies to the Republicans. The chances are that they will take care of you alleged Democrats in the primaries, and then take care of the Republicans in the general election, and in that way send us a majority of good Democrats, with a healthy minority of good Republicans, who have the interest of all the country at heart. You Democrats who are pushing this vicious measure are destroying your usefulness here. Some of you ought to announce now that you will not be candidates for renomination, so that the real Democrats in your districts can nominate candidates who can regain for your districts the influences you have lost.

Without the South there would be no Democratic Party, and without the help of the southern Democrats you could not accomplish a thing. By reason of their long services in the House the southern Democrats now wield an influence all out of proportion to their numerical strength, and as a rule they occupy committee positions that give them added power and influence; and they will be here when many of you are gone.

These false tirades against the South must stop. If they are to be made at all, let them come from some irresponsible Members on the Republican side; but if you who sit on our side are going to assault your own ranks, then do it in the open, and do not be playing the roll of Judas Iscariot toward the southern Democrats.

This bill would not prevent a single lynching, and you know it. It is not intended for that purpose. You are being dominated by a few Negro politicians who are in league with the Communists, who, in turn, are attempting to destroy this Republic and are turning heaven and earth to stir up trouble between the two races in the Southern States.

You are not only giving them aid and comfort, but by your conduct you are doing President Roosevelt and his administration the greatest possible injury. The Republicans would be delighted to see you cut President Roosevelt's throat politically, and are therefore voting with you on this vicious measure. They want to see it laid in his lap. They know that if he signs it, it will ruin him in the Southern States; and that if he vetoes it, they can get the benefit of the Negro votes this vicious measure would influence in the North.

It is time to stop this silly, asinine, stupid performance, and get down to the business of the Nation. This stuff is beneath the dignity of men who are worthy to be Representatives in the Congress of the United States. Besides, the country is getting tired of the vicious, false insinuations against the white people of the South, inspired, as I said, by the Communists, who are gloating over the damage such measures as this do to the peace and well-being of the people of both races throughout the country, and especially in the South.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] has been running for President on the Republican ticket on this issue for 20 years, and up to date he has only been able to get one vote, one time, in one convention in all those years, and that was a vote for Vice President and came from a State that does not have enough Negroes in it to do the cooking—and I am told that the delegate who cast that vote was a very old man who probably thought he was voting for the gentleman's grandfather. He does not stand any more chance to be nominated for President, even on the Republican ticket, on this silly issue than Governor Bob Taylor's gutta-percha dog did to "catch the asbestos cat in Hades." [Laughter and applause.]

In fact, if the white people in his district ever understand the stupidity of this measure he will never even come back to Congress, he will not even be nominated. The white people of the district will want somebody down here who will represent them, and the Negroes in the district will certainly want somebody who will not be stirring up trouble for them all the time.

You are creating trouble here in the District of Columbia, coaxing Negroes in here by the thousands to fill the relief rolls, until they have become almost intolerable. Inspired by a bunch of Communists in Baltimore, Negroes have been picketing the Peoples Drug Stores here in Washington for the past 2 years, trying to force them to fill their stores with Negro clerks. I wish the people you are sent down here to represent could go down here and witness the disgusting spectacle of big, burly Negroes picketing white drug stores, day after day, for 2 years, in order to try to force themselves in there as clerks where decent white women have to trade.

They now have a plan worked out to move at least one Negro family into every white residential block in the city. That is not only laying the groundwork for serious trouble between the races, but it will ruin real-estate values in the District of Columbia. Look how the white people are moving out into Maryland and Virginia where they can live in decent surroundings and where their women and children are protected.

These Communists are doing their best to force the Negro back into politics in the Southern States. One of their plans is to repeal the poll taxes in order to drag every ignorant Negro to the polls and bring back all the horrors of Reconstruction from which our people suffered in the years gone by.

These things are going to fail; you could not force Negro equality or Negro rule on the people of the South in a thousand years. As Henry W. Grady once said, we wrested the South from Negro rule when Federal drumbeats rolled nearer and Federal bayonets hedged closer about the ballot boxes of the South than it ever will again in this Republic.

The more you stir this trouble, the more Negroes you coax into the Northern States to fill your relief rolls and add to the already perplexing problems with which you and your children will have to deal. A very distinguished gentleman from Ohio told me a day or two ago that in his city 90 percent of the Negroes were on a public pay roll—mostly on relief or W. P. A. Look at the relief rolls in the District of Columbia and note the thousands of Negroes that have crowded in here and become wards of the Federal Government. I am told that they are even inviting them to New York City in order to put them on the relief roll or the W. P. A. roll and vote them in the next election.

Who is going to pay for all this? Who is going to bear this burden? If you repeal the poll taxes in the Southern States, in addition to all the other demoralizing results, it will take millions of dollars away from our school funds. Then who will pay our teachers? Are we going to be called upon to further tax the already overburdened white people of these States in order to furnish free education to these Negroes and to bring back a condition against which our people fought, bled, and died during the dark days of reconstruction? Are you going to continue to agitate this question until you break the taxpayers of your States and your cities, or until the flames of race hatred burst into riots, with all their devastating consequences?

The Negro is a tenant at sufferance wherever he comes in contact with the white man. His very existence depends upon that friendly relationship which has so long existed between the whites and blacks in the South, and which you are now attempting to destroy. When you disturb that peaceful relationship, the Negro must move on. Look at the thousands of them in Arkansas and in southern Missouri that have been stirred up by these Communists and now cannot find employment because white people do not want them on their lands. What is to become of them? Would you keep a Negro on your place if your wife and children were afraid of him? Certainly not!

You voted down the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLMER] to make this bill apply to gang murders. Why did you do that? Why were you not honest enough to vote it in and protect the innocent people in your own States who are being murdered by thugs every year? By voting down that amendment you refused to protect the innocent white man or the innocent Negro. He must be charged with a crime before this law will protect him. In other words, you can lynch all the innocent Negroes and all the innocent white people you want to, and the law does not apply. But you would protect the Negro rapist and even remunerate his family at the expense of the family of his victim and their neighbors.

It has been brought out here that lynching is on the wane and has almost disappeared in the Southern States. The reason of that is that improved communication facilities, the vigilance of the white people of the South and that of the better element of the black race, together with the swiftness and certainty of punishment, have largely put a stop to the perpetration of those crimes for which Negroes have been put to death.

In the North you mob them en masse. There were more Negroes killed in one race riot in Springfield, Ill., the home town of Abraham Lincoln, a few years ago than have been lynched in Mississippi in all its history. There were more Negroes mobbed in one race riot in Chicago, Ill., than have been lynched in all the Southern States since the Civil War. The same thing occurred in East St. Louis, and the same thing will occur in Cleveland, Ohio; Detroit, Mich.; New York City; Pittsburgh, Pa., and all the other large cities of the North if this agitation continues. Instead of helping to do away with lynching, you are agitating race hatred and stirring up trouble for yourselves and your children.

But this law does not protect the innocent Negroes who are mobbed and whose houses are burned and whose children are killed by mobs in these riots in cities like Springfield, Ill., Chicago, or East St. Louis. It is designed to protect only the Negroes who outrage or murder innocent white women and children.

You try to leave the impression that the few Negroes who were put to death in the South were innocent. Let us take a few instances and see what actually occurred.

A few years ago in the suburbs of one of the leading towns in Mississippi a little woman was standing before the mirror dressing to go to a W. C. T. U. meeting—I see the gentleman from New York [Mr. GAVAGAN] laughs at that; I am not surprised. A Negro brute approached the house, eased up onto the veranda, and crawled through a window. She saw him, reached in the bureau drawer and picked up her husband's pistol and pointed it at him. He saw from her terror-stricken face and trembling hand that she was unable to pull the trigger. He walked up, took the pistol from her hand, stuck it in his pocket, choked her into insensibility, raped her several times, then took her husband's razor from the bureau drawer and cut her throat from ear to ear and left her weltering in her own blood in the parlor of her own home. There was no question about his identity. When they caught him, he confessed, told how it happened, and told them where to find both the pistol and the razor.

I wonder what would have happened if that had been your sister, or your wife, or your daughter? Probably the next one will be.

But you would have the country believe that this was a poor, innocent victim of the lawless white people of the community; and under this bill you would send the sheriff of the county to the penitentiary and then tax the county $10,000 to pay to the family of this vicious brute.

This encourages others to perpetrate the same offense.

I remember some years ago there was a Negro in jail in a little town in north central Mississippi. The jailer got sorry for him and made a trusty of him. He sent him out to his house on an errand, and while there he attempted to rape the daughter of his benefactor, a beautiful girl about 16 years old. The girl's mother rushed between him and his intended victim, when he produced a razor and slashed the mother's throat. With her lifeblood gushing between her fingers, she held her throat with one hand and fought that Negro with the other until her daughter could escape and help could arrive, when she fainted and expired.

I wonder what would have happened if that had occurred in your town? What would you have done if that had been your daughter? These are the things you are encouraging by your agitation of this measure.

When you had this measure up before during a Republican administration, after certain Members had delivered themselves of their usual tirade against the South, the telephone operator down at the Driscoll Hotel, right at the foot of Capitol Hill, was waylaid on her way home and raped by a brutal Negro on the Capitol Grounds—right in front of the Library of Congress.

Just the other day in one of the leading restaurants in Washington—less than four blocks from the White House—a young white woman, the wife of a prominent man from Pennsylvania, went into the washroom to wash her hands, when a brutal Negro followed her, slipped in and locked the door, choked her into insensibility, and raped her and escaped. That is the kind of stuff you are encouraging by slobbering on these Negroes.

It is not safe for a white woman to walk the streets of Washington at night without an escort. The Negroes are driving the white women, and especially the white children, from the parks of this city. All this is building up trouble that is likely to burst into a race riot the like of which the country has never seen. You had better stop this foolishness before it is too late and pay some attention to people who know something about the subject. The Negro is not a sun-burnt Yankee. He is of a different race and must be dealt with as such.

I remember some years ago, down near Memphis, Tenn., a little girl of 12 or 13 years of age had to walk to school something like a half mile. There was only one point along the road where she was out of sight of either her home or the schoolhouse. Her fond mother would stand in the door and watch her until she reached that point, knowing that when she had gone 50 or 75 yards farther she would be in sight of the schoolhouse.

A Negro man concealed himself at this point, waylaid this little girl, seized her, raped her, then took his ax and chopped her head off, and buried her head and her body at different places in an old slough.

What would have happened if that had been your child?

I am sorry to relate these horrible things, but somebody must tell the Congress and the American people the truth about this proposition, and you have not done it.

These are just a few of the bestial outrages that have brought summary punishment to the perpetrators of these crimes. I have not related some of the worst ones.

Now, we are going to protect the white women and children of the South at all costs, and we are going to protect the innocent Negroes, if you will let us. This law would hamper our State and county governments in their attempts to protect either of them.

About 3 years ago a white man living in one of the counties I represent had a Negro living on his place. One night this Negro came to his house, called him out, knocked him in the head, went into the house, locked the door and outraged his wife for 2 or 3 days, in a manner too horrible to relate.

He then killed her, wrapped the bodies in tow sacks, buried them, got in the man's car and drove away. This home was somewhat isolated, and it was several days before these people were missed, and then people just thought they had gone away on a visit. They finally found this Negro driving this car in Alabama, and when pinned down he confessed and told where to find the bodies.

It was with the utmost difficulty, and at great expense, that the strong arm of the constituted authorities in both Alabama and Mississippi protected this wretch from the hands of an infuriated mob.

But these Negro-pandering demagogues never give us credit for the sacrifices we make to prevent mob violence, and which probably would not be prevented in other sections of the country.

At this very moment, the National Guard in my own State is protecting a Negro criminal, an outlaw, a murderer, until the court can try him, and it is costing the taxpayers of Mississippi thousands of dollars to do so. You do not give us credit for all the effort we have put forth, all the money we have spent, and all the peace officers of the South who have been killed or injured in trying to prevent lynching; but as compensation for our efforts and our troubles, you drag this stupid measure in here and malign and misrepresent the white people of the South and stir these vicious Negroes to renewed attacks, endanger the lives of our women and children and make it impossible for Negroes to continue to live peacefully in many communities where they have been for generations.

The white people of the South are not enemies of the Negro. They are the best friends he ever had. We were not responsible for Negro slavery, nor would we have it returned. Those Negroes were sold to us by the people in the Northern States, largely in Massachusetts, and it has been a problem ever since what to do with them. Had it ever occurred to you that slavery never became immoral in some Northern States, and especially in Massachusetts, until they had sold all their Negroes and got the money for them?

We in the South did not reduce the Negro to slavery, as some people would have you believe. We elevated him from the position of savage to that of servant, started him on the road toward civilization, and showed him for the first time the light of a Christianity, through the unfortunate instrumentality of slavery.

For tens of thousands of years, the Negro had roamed at will over the continent of Africa, the richest country in all the world, feasting upon his fellowman, and had never even developed the art of agriculture to the extent of making his living out of the ground. For countless ages he had trod the sands of his native soil with diamonds beneath his feet, and never even dreamed of the theory of values.

He saw the dawn of civilization and watched the pageant of the centuries pass without so much as manifesting a desire to participate in progress. He bowed beneath his master's whip at the building of the pyramids, and watched succeeding civilizations rise and fall, and all he ever learned was to construct a rude shelter of bark and grass with which to shield his head from the beating rays of a tropical sun until he was brought to America and taught the rudiments of civilization and shown the sunlight of Christianity by the white people of the Southern States.

For 300 years he has enjoyed the richest blessings his race has ever known as a result of the care and training given him by his white friends in the South. This has been brought about by the only peaceful relationship that can ever exist between the whites and blacks living side by side, and that is a complete segregation of the two races.

Yet you would destroy this relationship, bring trouble to the white people and misery to the Negroes in order to placate a few communistic agitators or get a few Negro votes in your own districts.

God save the white people of this Nation from such Representatives!

God save the Negro from such "friends!" [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi to strike out the enacting clause.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RANKIN) there were—ayes 62, noes 128.

So the motion was rejected.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOFFMAN: On page 2, strike out all of line 5 and down to and including the word "offense", in line 6.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, is the amendment in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, this is in part the same thing I tried to do by the amendment offered to strike part of the last three lines on page 1 when the Chairman ruled the amendment was not germane. However, you twist it around a little and strike out instead of adding to, and then the amendment is proper. I am glad I have learned that.

The purpose of this amendment is just this: You look at the last three lines on page 1 of the bill and you notice that the purpose of the law is to assure to persons within the jurisdiction of the States "equal protection and due process of law to all persons charged with or suspected or convicted of any offense."

Now, the title of the bill is to extend due process of law and equal protection of the law to all persons within the jurisdiction of the States. It says "to all persons." Is there anyone in the House who does not believe that due process of law or that equal protection of the law should be extended to a man who has never been suspected of, charged with, or convicted of a crime? But this bill—and there is no doubt about it—is limited in that it extends that protection of equality and due process only to those persons who have been charged with or suspected or convicted of an offense.

What an absurdity? If a man has been convicted—if a man convicted has been lynched, under this bill, his dependents can recover from $2,000 to $10,000. That is all right; but under this bill, if in the course of rioting, if in bringing about the lynching, that mob causes the death of an innocent bystander, his dependents cannot recover one cent because the law does not extend its protection to any person anywhere unless he has been charged with or suspected or convicted of an offense. I ask the attention of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH]. If he wants to extend the protection of the Constitution to every citizen of the United States, to give to the law abiding as well as to the convicted the protection of the law—due process of the law—why not strike out the words that I have indicated in my amendment and extend the protection that he wants to give by this bill to all those 129,000,000 citizens who have not been suspected of a crime, who have not been accused of a crime, who have not been convicted of a crime? When we fail to do that, when we sit here and pass a bill like this and fail to extend that protection to the innocent, as well as to those suspected of a crime or found guilty, do we not demonstrate to the people at large that we are not sincere, or that we have not read the bill—one or the other—and that we do not realize what is in it? Why not adopt this amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I want very much to support a piece of legislation which will effectively curb the practice of lynching, and I want to support a piece of legislation that will protect the innocent from destruction by mob violence. I do not believe that this bill adequately protects the innocent, unless the amendment of our friend from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] is adopted. It protects only those who are suspected of or are accused of or convicted of a crime. There are many people who have been lynched in the past, no doubt, who have not been legally "suspected" of a crime. I took the trouble to look for the word "suspected" in Bouvier's legal dictionary, and I cannot find it in that dictionary. There is no legal interpretation of the word "suspected" that I can find in that dictionary. Therefore, the word "suspected" must be a very difficult one for any court to construe. If a man is legally suspected, there probably must have been some action or conclusion on the part of the sheriff or some other law-enforcing officer. No judge could decide whether a lynched man had been suspected of a crime if the peace officers charged with the duty of preserving order in the area did not have knowledge sufficient to cast suspicion upon him. Finally, if a man were lynched whom the peace officers were trying diligently to protect from lynching simply because they were convinced he was innocent, the family would receive no benefit under this bill, as I read it. A man must have been taken into custody or be legally suspected, accused, or convicted of a crime before he becomes entitled to protection under this bill. I, therefore, suggest to my colleagues on the left that they consider this matter seriously and adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan in order to protect the innocent. That is the sort of person I am most interested in protecting.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. Naturally, I must oppose this amendment, for it attempts to strike at the very constitutional heart of the bill. We cannot cover constitutionally—that is, federally, and I am speaking of the Federal Government under the Constitution—every crime committed in every State. We must have constitutional mandate to do that, and it is only where due process of law, the equal protection of the law, is denied by the judicial or the police officers of the State that the Federal Government can interfere.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GAVAGAN. Yes.

Mr. HOBBS. Will the gentleman take the other minute allowed him and explain why guilt or innocence of the person lynched makes any difference within the meaning of the equal protection of the law phase of the fourteenth amendment?

Mr. GAVAGAN. It makes this difference, that we have in this country in criminal proceedings a presumption of innocence, and coming down to us from the Magna Carta, the right of trial by a jury of his peers. I thought all Americans knew that. I sincerely hope that this amendment will be defeated.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. It will be noted in lines 7 and 8, on page 2, that the mob must act "with the purpose or consequence of preventing the apprehension or trial or punishment" by law of such citizen or citizens. These words are left in by the proposed amendment of the gentleman from Michigan, and these words are, in my mind, the important words which make this bill apply to an attempt to deprive a citizen of his constitutional rights. Naturally there would be no purpose or consequence of preventing apprehension or trial or punishment unless the person involved was either suspected of, charged with, or convicted of some offense. Therefore the amendment which is offered is rather senseless, because the important words are left in. This amendment and others which attempt to strike out the feature which brings this bill under the Constitution should be defeated.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman give me a legal definition of the word "suspected"?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. I think the ordinary meaning of the word "suspected" and the ordinary meaning of the words "suspected of, charged with, or convicted of an offense" cover the three descriptions of a person that a mob might attempt to keep from having proper trial or punishment by law.

Mr. HINSHAW. Does the gentleman recognize the fact that a man might be lynched without any knowledge on the part of the law-enforcing agency itself, or without accusation or suspicion or conviction by the law?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. This bill does not attempt to cover every murder or every lynching, as that term is popularly used. It sets up its own rather carefully defined description of what a mob and lynching should be.

Mr. HINSHAW. You are trying to protect in this bill those people against whom the probability of guilt is strong, but you are not protecting the innocent in any way.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. No. You are protecting everybody against the denial of equal justice, equal protection of the law, and denial of due process. A person is not even taken into custody unless he is either suspected, charged with, or convicted of some offense.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HOFFMAN. According to the title, you say you are going to protect every person within the jurisdiction of the court—give due process of law and equal protection of the law?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. That is right.

Mr. HOFFMAN. What is the reason that the Constitution cannot protect a man who is lynched when he is innocent and has never been suspected of a crime, or a person who is killed while a mob is lynching someone—an innocent bystander? Why can you not protect him just as well as the man who is guilty?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. This bill would protect both the guilty and the innocent against denial of due process of law. The purpose of this bill is to require legal processes within the State. That is the reason it does not interfere with State's rights.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The last three lines of your first section limit the protection to those who are suspected of, convicted of, or charged with, a crime. It does not apply to the innocent man.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

The pro forma amendments were withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HOFFMAN) there were—ayes 54, noes 87.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, I had three other amendments on the Clerk's desk. If they may be considered together and voted on I will not speak.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that three amendments at the Clerk's desk be offered and considered together and voted on at the same time. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendments offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOFFMAN: On Page 2, line 4, after the syllable "ment", insert a comma and the words "or coercion or intimidation"; and after the word "persons", at the end of line 4, add the words "who may have a job and who may desire to work or who may be."

Amendment offered by Mr. HOFFMAN: On page 2, line 7, after the word "preventing," insert the following: "any person from working in any place of employment or at any job which he may have and of preventing."

Amendment offered by Mr. HOFFMAN: Page 2, line 11, after the last word in line 11, "thereof", insert the following: "or in preventing any person who has a job from working at that job."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendments offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HOFFMAN) there were—ayes 25, noes 98.

So the amendments were rejected.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. Evidently a quorum is present on the count of the Chair just made.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. Whenever a lynching occurs, any officer or employee of a State or any governmental subdivision thereof who is charged with the duty or possesses the authority to protect such person or persons from lynching, and neglects or refuses to make all diligent efforts to protect such person or persons from lynching, or who has custody of the person or persons lynched and neglects or refuses to make all diligent efforts to protect such person or persons from lynching, or who is charged with the duty or possesses the authority to apprehend, keep in custody, or prosecute the members or any member of the lynching mob and neglects or refuses to make diligent efforts so to do, shall be guilty of a felony and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding 5 years, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

SEC. 4. Whenever a lynching of any person or persons occurs and information on oath is submitted to the Attorney General of the United States that any officer or employee of a State or any governmental subdivision thereof who was charged with the duty or possessed the authority to protect such person or persons from lynching, or who had custody of the person or persons lynched, has neglected or refused to make all diligent efforts to protect such person or persons from lynching, or has neglected or refused to make all diligent efforts to apprehend, keep in custody, or prosecute the members or any member of the lynching mob, the Attorney General of the United States shall cause an investigation to be made to inquire whether there has been any violation of this act.

SEC. 5. (1) Every governmental subdivision of a State to which the State shall have delegated functions of police shall be civilly liable for any lynching which occurs within its territorial jurisdiction or which follows upon seizure and abduction of the victim or victims by a mob within its territorial jurisdiction, in every case in which any officer (or officers) of that governmental subdivision charged with the duty or possessing the authority of preserving the peace, or citizens thereof when called upon by any such officer, have neglected or refused to use all diligence and all powers vested in them for the protection of the person or persons lynched. In every such case the culpable governmental subdivision shall be liable to each person injured, or to his or her next of kin if such injury results in death, for a sum not less than $2,000 and not more than $10,000 as monetary compensation for such injury or death: Provided, That the satisfaction of judgment against one governmental subdivision responsible for a lynching shall bar further proceedings against any other governmental subdivision which may also be responsible for that lynching.

(2) Liability arising under this section may be enforced and the compensation herein provided for may be recovered in a civil action in the United States district court for the judicial district of which the defendant governmental subdivision is a part. Such action shall be brought and prosecuted by the Attorney General of the United States or his duly authorized representative in the name of the United States for the use of the real party in interest, or, if the claimant or claimants shall so elect, by counsel employed by the claimant or claimants, but in any event without prepayment of costs. If the amount of any such judgment is not paid upon demand, payment thereof may be enforced by any process available under the State law for the enforcement of any other money judgment against such a governmental subdivision. Any officer of such governmental subdivision or any person who disobeys or fails to comply with any lawful order or decree of the court for the enforcement of the judgment shall be guilty of contempt of that court and punished accordingly. The cause of action accruing hereunder to a person injured by lynching shall not abate with the subsequent death of that person before final judgment but shall survive to his or her next of kin. For the purpose of this act the next of kin of a deceased victim of lynching shall be determined according to the laws of intestate distribution in the State of domicile of the decedent. Any judgment or award under this act shall be exempt from all claims of creditors.

(3) Any judge of the United States district court for the judicial district wherein any suit is instituted under the provisions of this act may by order direct that such suit be tried in any division of such district as he may designate in such order.

(4) In any action instituted under this section, a showing either (a) that any peace officer or officers of the defendant governmental subdivision after timely notice of danger of mob violence failed to provide protection for the person subsequently lynched, or (b) that apprehension of danger of mob violence was general within the community where the abduction or lynching occurred, or (c) of any other circumstance or circumstances from which the trier of fact might reasonably conclude that the governmental subdivision had failed to use all diligence to protect the person or persons abducted or lynched, shall be prima facie evidence of liability.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PACE: On page 5, line 24, strike out all of subsection (4), section 5.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, I think I can say that this amendment should be offered for the purpose of maintaining the self-respect of the Congress. It is the prima facie section. It is not essential to the bill. It is a section that sets out how you can make a prima facie case of liability against a county for the $10,000 damages.

Please understand that the bill provides that if a person is apprehended in your county and brought to my county and lynched, your county is liable for $10,000 and my county is liable for $10,000. This section that I seek to strike provides that if there was apprehension of mob violence in your county, which, we will say, is 100 miles from my county, where the lynching took place, but the culprit was taken from your county—if there is any apprehension or rumor of mob violence in your county and the culprit is brought, in the dead of night, to my county, brought across the line and lynched within my county, the people of my county are liable for $10,000 in damages. The bill does not require that there shall be apprehension or rumors of lynching in my county, but only over yonder where the abduction took place. Certainly not even the author of the bill really would insist upon such an absurd thing as that—that a mere rumor in a county 100 miles from where the lynching took place, or yet in another county entirely, makes out a prima facie case against the county where it does take place for damages of $10,000. I am, of course, opposed to the bill in all its features, but certainly not even the author of the bill would want to go to that length.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PACE. I yield.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. I think the gentleman is in error in his construction of section 5 in that if his county were, we will say, the scene of a lynching, his county could only be civilly liable if the officers of the county were negligent or refused to use diligence. The county would not be liable unless the officers were negligent or refused to use diligence whether the lynching were in the gentleman's county or some other county.

Mr. PACE. But the gentleman forgets that you make out a prima facie case against my county that there was lack of diligence by showing that there was an apprehension of mob violence 100 or 200 miles away. That would put the entire burden on us instead of where it belonged. Surely the gentleman would not maintain that the burden should be on my county when a culprit is brought 100 miles into my county and lynched in my county. I call the gentleman's attention to the language appearing on page 6 in lines 3, 4, and 5:

That apprehension of danger of mob violence was general within the community where the abduction or lynching occurred.

Certainly that is absurd, and the gentleman would not support any measure that states that that would make out a prima facie case in court for $10,000 against the county. I say it is just absurd, and I do not believe anyone here who has any respect for the law would want to support it. As I said, I am opposed to the bill in all its features, but let us not go to the absurd of absurdities.

Mr. CREAL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PACE. I yield.

Mr. CREAL. The gentleman has said a great deal about a prima facie case. There is no prima facie evidence in the matter at all. Because a lynching took place, it must be at least they have evidence; a case must be made out and proved of misfeasance or malfeasance. It would be the same thing as violation of the law.

Mr. PACE. The gentleman has not read this section.

Mr. CREAL. There is no prima facie case in the lynching.

Mr. PACE. This applies to the $10,000 damages against the county either where the lynching occurred or where the person was seized.

Mr. CREAL. That is not prima facie. There is no prima facie anywhere in the bill.

Mr. PACE. Well, read it; read it. The language states plainly "shall be prima facie evidence of liability." What does the gentleman maintain these words mean? It means that you have made out a prima facie case against the county when you show that there was apprehension of mob violence 100 miles away.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PACE. I yield.

Mr. GAVAGAN. I believe the gentleman is absolutely in error in the weight that he gives to the words "prima facie." I believe he confuses in his mind the ultimate burden of proof with the burden of proof of going forward with the evidence. This creates the burden of proof of going forward with the evidence, but not the burden of proof of establishing the ultimate issue.

This gives the county the opportunity to come in and say: "This mob violence happened way yonder 200 or 300 miles. We had no opportunity to know about it or to protect against it." That then defeats the prima facie case of going forward with the evidence.

Mr. PACE. You have, of course, the right to overcome a prima facie case; but I submit to the gentleman—and I believe that in his calmer moments he will agree with me—that it would be utterly ridiculous to say that a prima facie case is made out against a county by simply saying that there was a rumor of violence 50 or 100 or 500 miles away. Should this bill become law, of course, nobody is ever going to be lynched in the county where the crime is committed. Everybody is going to have sense enough to take the culprit into somebody else's county and make them pay for it.

Let me repeat, I am against in any and every form, and have offered this amendment to show you to what extent you will go when you try to take a hand in somebody else's business. It is futile and absurd.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. PACE) there were—ayes 37, noes 79.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. If any particular provision, sentence, or clause, or provisions, sentences, or clauses, of this act, or the application thereof to any particular person or circumstance, is held invalid, the remainder of this act, and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises automatically.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. McCORMACK, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 801, pursuant to House Resolution 103, he reported the bill back to the House with an amendment adopted in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 252, nays 131, not voting 40, as follows:

So the bill was passed.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FISH. I would like to know whether it is proper to propose a unanimous consent at this time?

The SPEAKER. Not at this juncture. The Clerk will report the pairs.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

On this vote:

Mr. Hennings (for) with Mr. DeRouen (against).
Mr. Jarrett (for) with Mr. Griffith (against).
Mr. Maciejewski (for) with Mr. Maloney (against).
Mr. Wigglesworth (for) with Mr. Mouton (against).
Mr. Geyer of California (for) with Mr. West (against).
Mr. Schwert (for) with Mr. Allen of Louisiana (against).
Mr. Darrow (for) with Mr. Fernandez (against).
Mr. Sabath (for) with Mr. Mansfield (against).

General pairs:

Mr. Bell with Mr. Dondero.
Mr. Ferguson with Mr. Knutson.
Mr. Dempsey with Mr. Reed of New York.
Mr. Harrington with Mr. Woodruff of Michigan.
Mr. McArdle with Mr. Lambertson.
Mr. Nichols with Mr. Case of South Dakota.
Mr. Wood with Mr. Wheat.
Mr. Smith of Illinois with Mr. August H. Andresen.
Mr. Dies with Mr. Bradley of Michigan.
Mr. Monroney with Mr. Clevenger.
Mr. Flaherty with Mr. Johnson of Illinois.
Mr. Gillie with Mr. Buckler of Minnesota.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, my colleague the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. McARDLE, is absent on account of the death of his father. Had he been present he would have voted "yea" on the motion to discharge and "yea" on the final passage of the bill.

I ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD at this point a telegram which I received from Mr. McARDLE to that effect.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EBERHARTER]?

There was no objection.

The telegram referred to follows:

PITTSBURGH, PA., January 9, 1940.

HON. HERMAN EBERHARTER,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

I regret exceedingly that the death of my father, P. J. McArdle, and the necessity of remaining here to help settle his affairs makes it impossible for me to be in Washington to vote to declare lynching a Federal offense. Lynching in whatever section of the country, under whatever circumstances, and regardless of the race or creed of the victim is a barbarous custom tolerance of which is sure to create a state of mind which will condone other fundamental violations of our democratic principles.

JOSEPH A. McARDLE, M. C.

Mr. McKEOUGH. Mr. Speaker, my colleague the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. SABATH, was unexpectedly called back to Chicago this afternoon before the roll call. If he had been present, he would have voted "yea" on the passage of the bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a brief newspaper clipping on conservation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. BROWN OF OHIO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD relative to the subject of export of farm products.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address made on last Monday by the Solicitor General of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWEENEY]?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHN L. McMILLAN asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. THILL asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD with reference to the bill (H. R. 7693) entitled "Granting pensions to certain soldiers, sailors, and marines who served in the Philippine uprisings and campaigns from July 5, 1902, to December 31, 1913, and for other purposes," and also to insert a letter from S. M. Booth, of Johnson City, Tenn.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ALEXANDER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to include in my remarks made in the Committee of the Whole quotations from an editorial in yesterday's Washington Post.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. POAGE]?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOREN asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. RANKIN and Mr. NORRELL asked and were given permission to revise and extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Am I correct in the assumption the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] secured unanimous consent this morning for all Members to have 5 days in which to extend their own remarks in the RECORD on the bill just passed?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is correct. It will therefore not be necessary for the Members to make individual requests to extend their own remarks on the bill just passed.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Speaker, I desire, with unanimous consent, to insert in the RECORD an article by Prof. Gustav Cassel entitled "Must There Be an End to Progress?" in the October 1939 number of the Quarterly Review, issued by the Scandinavian Bank, Stockholm, which includes several statistical tables.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD by including therein a list of those who attended the New Deal $100-per-plate shake-down dinner—the Jackson Day dinner.

Mr. EBERHARTER. I object, Mr. Speaker, because of the manner in which the request was made, it being an untrue statement that it was a shake-down dinner.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman should either object or reserve the right to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania objects to the request.

ANTILYNCHING BILL

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, the vote on the antilynching bill was reached sooner than was expected. Some Members who desired to vote on it were in a committee room where the bells did not ring. I just wish to state in the RECORD the fact that the bells did not ring in that committee room and for that reason they were not present.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BOLLES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a statement of the American Wage Earners Protective Association.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a brief editorial from the Block newspapers.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under a previous special order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS] is recognized for 30 minutes.

OUR WAR IS THE WAR AGAINST UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, on all sides one hears it expressed that we want to keep this country out of war abroad. This afternoon I want to emphasize that the very best method of accomplishing that purpose is by recognizing the fact that we have a war of our own here at home to fight. It is a war we have been fighting for the past 10 years with varying degrees of success. It is a war against unemployment, primarily, and against discouragement. It is a war to restore hope, opportunity, and a smooth functioning of our economic system in America. The winning of this war will be the best answer that can be given to the challenge of any dictator in the world or to any so-called un-American activities.

We have two jobs to do, as I see it, one to work for peace and the other to win this war against unemployment. So we come to the work of this Congress and to a consideration of what our duty is in connection with it.

For the past 10 years Americans have been thinking harder than they ever have before. They have been doing this because they had to, and out of this thinking there have emerged a number of facts on which I believe pretty general agreement has been reached. One is that a basic cause of unemployment lies in the fact that the savings of the country do not go promptly into investment. Another is that whenever the volume of active consumer buying power is increased then production and employment also increase. Another is that at no time has sufficient additional purchasing power been put into circulation to actually draw idle hoards from hiding into investment or to bring about a large enough national income to balance our Budget.

All agree that nothing is fundamentally wrong with our people, our governmental institutions, or our country generally. All can see that we have an abundance of natural resources and the most perfect productive machinery in the world. Every honest and thoughtful person knows that until all our unemployed people are put back to work and until machinery is perfected to give our producers a sustained high level of real market demand we shall not have solved our problem.

REAL JOB OF CONGRESS

The task of this Congress is to end unemployment in America. If this Congress does not do that, then it will be the task of the next Congress. It will remain the primary task and duty of every Congress until it is done. There is no running away from it, no putting it off, for the future of democracy, of human freedom, of all that Americans hold dear, depends upon our successful accomplishment of this task.

The solution of the unemployment problem must be found for us here in the United States, in my opinion, in the establishment and maintenance of a balanced relationship between production on the one hand and active consumer demand upon the other. If our people could steadily and regularly buy what our farms and industries can so easily produce and what our farms have already produced and continuously do produce, we would hold the answer to the challenge of every dictator in the world in the hollow of our hand.

FOUR MAIN FIELDS OF WORK

Therefore it seems to me there are four primary fields in which we must work, four primary fields of legislation to which I hope this Congress will address itself.

The first is the field of taxation, so that we may have a tax system which will discourage the hoarding of funds and their removal from the purchasing power stream, but which will bear as lightly as possible on active, competitive business and its consumers.

The second is the field of pensions, social-security payments, and public works, so that we can assure to the American producers that there will always be a core of sustained and dependable buying power for their goods regardless of how the economic winds may blow.

The third is the field of agriculture, and has to do with measures to adjust the disparity between agricultural and industrial income and buying power.

The fourth is in the field of money, credit, and the financial system generally, which, in my judgment, is the key to the whole situation. I say that because I am convinced it is largely our archaic, debt-based monetary system which today robs the farmers of their lands, dictates what enterprises shall and what ones shall not go forward, and even obtains its tribute from the sovereign Government of this Nation whenever that Government finds it necessary in the general public interest to increase the volume of the medium of exchange in circulation.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield to the gentleman from Idaho.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. I do not want to interrupt the continuity of the gentleman's thought, but I do wish to ask the gentleman if he does not believe the American people as a nation have lost control of their credit and currency.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Yes; I do think so. I think it has been done largely without the people even realizing what was happening, but I think they will continue to be in the position of having lost that control until such time as Congress exercises its constitutional duty to be the sole agency that brings money into circulation originally. I believe the function of creating a medium of exchange is a function of national sovereignty. I have said that a good many times, but I am going to go right on saying it until something is done about the matter.

TAXATION

The President has already suggested that we should take action in the field of taxation. I believe he is right in what he has said. I believe taxes on consumption are already too heavy, and would point out to you that more than half of our current Federal Government revenue is derived from indirect taxes that fall primarily on consumption. I believe if taxes are to be increased, therefore, it should be done by increasing individual income- and inheritance-tax rates and by levying taxes against excess war profits.

AN ATTACK ON MONOPOLY PROBLEM

Those of us who are sincere in wanting to preserve a free economic system in America well know that it is private monopoly which begets public monopoly, and we know also that the inheritance tax, properly and fairly levied, is one of the most available means of preventing the pyramiding in the hands of a few families of monopolistic, industrial, and financial powers.

These general matters of taxation are, of course, things that must come from the Ways and Means Committee primarily, but there is one phase of this tax question upon which I have such strong conviction myself that I have prepared a measure with regard to which I would like to speak briefly this afternoon.

H. R. 7645—TAXATION OF EXCESS PROFITS RESULTING FROM WAR TRADE

At the moment we are confronted by problems presented to us by the outbreak, a few months ago, of the war in Europe and by a continuance of hostilities in the Far East and elsewhere.

There are several matters to be thought of in this connection. The first is that the existence of war abroad inevitably offers the opportunity for increased export trade by certain American industries, particularly those associated with the production of munitions; at the same time there is quite certain to take place a curtailment in the market for certain other types of American products which are bought by foreign buyers in peacetimes, but largely dispensed with in time of war. Some American industries, therefore, will profit from the war situation, others will suffer.

In the second place, it is important to remember that during the years between 1914 and 1917 American corporations which were affected by the war demand of Europe were induced, in many cases, to greatly expand their plant capacity and thus to acquire a substantial interest in the continuance of the war itself. This development furthermore meant that this overexpanded plant capacity would probably become of little value upon the conclusion of peace and would consequently contribute to the bringing on of a post-war depression.

Finally, the question arises whether we are to depend upon the war abroad to restore a tawdry sort of temporary prosperity for this country or whether we are to attack and solve America's critical unemployment problem in a constructive way. If we effectively solve that great problem we can then offer to the dictators of the world a challenge which they cannot meet in the eyes of their own people.

For all these reasons (1) as a matter of simple justice to those lines of American industrial and agricultural business which will not only not be helped but positively injured by the war; (2) as a means of preventing an unhealthy over-expansion in the munitions and allied industries; (3) and as a first step toward the revision of our tax structure along a line more likely to be conducive to the solution of our unemployment problem—for all these reasons it seems to me essential that this Congress pass a war excess-profits tax measure.

I fully realize that there are many ways in which this problem may be handled. One method in which many people strongly believe, but which I have not employed in the preparation of my bill, is the method of basing a profits tax on the percentage of earnings on actual invested capital. I am perfectly frank to say that I am not wedded to any particular program in this connection and that I have introduced my bill primarily for the purpose of bringing this most-important matter before the Congress and the Nation.

The bill which I have introduced is based upon the principle of taxing those profits which are in excess of the average profits derived by corporations in a base period consisting of any 3 of the following 4 income-tax years: 1935, 1936, 1937, and 1938. The taxpayer may select any 3 of these 4 years at his option, and his average profits in those years are regarded as normal profits under the terms of this bill. No special taxes are provided in the bill, however, on any profits of 5 percent or less of the adjusted declared value of capital stock, even if the average earnings of the corporation in the base period were less than that percentage. Any corporation may elect to use a figure equal to 5 percent of the adjusted declared value of its capital stock as its base period net income. On the other hand, for corporations with especially large profits during the base period the Commissioner has the option of fixing 15 percent of the adjusted declared value of the corporation's capital stock as its base-period net income. In such a case the corporation would pay war excess-profits taxes on that portion of its future earnings which exceeded 15 percent, even though its average earnings in the base period were more than that.

RELATIVE INCOME OF SMALL AND LARGE BUSINESS; EXEMPTION FOR ALL CORPORATIONS OF LESS THAN $100,000 CAPITAL

This bill exempts completely all corporations whose capital stock is $100,000 or less. This means that such additional burdens as the passage of this bill will entail would fall only upon the earnings of corporations having a capitalization over and above $100,000, and in no case upon small business, but only on the larger aggregations of industrial wealth. The justification for this feature of the bill is found in an examination of the dividend records of American corporations during the years 1929 to 1935, inclusive, which show the following disparity of income. During those 6 years American corporations as a whole dipped into their reserves to cover losses totaling $17,000,000,000. Yet in that same period a small group of 960 supercorporations, representing only two-tenths of 1 percent of the whole number, instead of losing money actually earned $9,000,000,000, so in reality 99.8 percent of the American corporations were losing heavily in order to provide handsome earnings for 960 of the colossal corporations.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Does the gentleman's survey show a break-down of the earnings of that small number of corporations during the period from 1930 to 1932, inclusive?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I do not have those figures at the moment. I know where to go to get them. Those I have given are from Standard Statistics. It would seem obvious to me that any reasonable taxing method which might affect this concentration of wealth and earning power in the hands of a few great corporations would be welcomed by Members of Congress. Again, to illustrate the same point, in 1936 there were 286,000 corporations in this country with less than $100,000 of assets, and 175,000 of those 286,000 corporations had no net income in that year, but in that same year out of 127,000 corporations with assets of $100,000 and above, nearly two-thirds showed a net income. Finally, among those corporations of a billion dollar capitalization or more—of which there were some 5,000—a little over four-fifths showed a substantial net income. What I am concerned with is the question of the American small enterprise which seems to me to be of considerable importance.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Yes.

Mr. LEAVY. From the gentleman's investigation and research on this subject, would he feel warranted in saying that the excess war profits that he proposes to reach will be largely profits accruing to those supercorporations, or will the profits be scattered throughout all corporations?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. My answer to that would be that the bill exempts from its provisions all corporations with $100,000 capitalization or less.

Mr. LEAVY. The thought I had in mind is, Who is going to reap more profits, if there are any, the small or the large corporations?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Of course, I have a few figures here later on to show that in several cases at least I can assure the gentleman it is the big ones. However, this particular measure takes account of that only in the exemption which it gives to corporations of less than $100,000 capitalization.

Thus, we have a bill before the House that simply says that whereas it is good for the Government of the United States to move as rapidly as it can in the direction of a balanced Budget, and whereas certain American industries are at present in a position to derive substantial war profits over and above their normal rate in peacetimes, therefore it is no more than fair that these excess profits should be taxed for the benefit of the entire Nation, particularly when to a considerable extent these profits will be the result of the shipment of valuable raw products and materials out of the United States, although it might at some future time be important that those resources be available for our own national defense.

Apparently some question has been raised as to whether any large additions to corporations' earnings are to be expected as a result of the wars abroad. In at least partial answer to this I give the example of the Du Pont concern which earned $63,000,000 in the 9 months ending September 30, 1939, as against $31,000,000 in the 9 months ending September 30, 1938, and the United States Steel Corporation, which made a profit of $10,400,000 for the third quarter of 1939 as compared to $1,300,000 in the third quarter of the previous year. These figures are indicative of a trend, and that it is a trend caused by the war in Europe I think no thoughtful person will deny.

Of course, if no excess profits are made by particular corporations, then obviously they would have nothing to fear from a tax measure of this sort, and would, on the other hand, stand to share in the improved conditions of the Nation, which I believe would be helped in resulting from a more equitable distribution of the tax burden such as I am convinced this measure would give us.

I give that rather brief outline of the provisions of this bill as illustrative of what seems to be a sound trend in taxation legislation, and the kind of thing that we need to give more consideration to. I do not want to be misunderstood as being against people making profits, far from it. I am in favor of reasonable profits, just like everyone is against sin; but I want the possibility of a reasonable distribution of enterprise in this country, and I want that possibility to be encouraged by the tax structure which we have. I am inclined to think that at present the burden is borne much too largely by consumers and small enterprises, and not largely enough by those enterprises where excessive reserves might be built up, and where, through large inheritances and individual incomes, hoardings might take place.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Before going to the next part of the gentleman's discussion I would like to ask this question. Referring to your remarks with reference to indirect taxation, does the gentleman feel that the new proposal, which is being discussed by Secretary Wallace in the form of a certificate plan, would be an indirect tax, placed directly on the consumer?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I imagine it would add up to that in the end, largely. I probably ought not answer the gentleman's question so shortly as that, because frankly I have not studied that question as much as I should before expressing a definite opinion. I give you merely my impression of the thing at the present time.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is about the way it appears to me, as being a consumption tax.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I am not eager to extend the scope of governmental action. Indeed, I am eager to preserve with every power at our command the opportunities for individual initiative which have been so important a part of the American way of life through the year. My job and the job of other Members would be much easier if we could abandon at once all the efforts of our Government to take action in the economic field. If I believed for one moment that such a course of action would put our people back to work and win our war against unemployment, I would be down here advocating it with all the vigor at my command. But, on the contrary, I am convinced that to abandon every attempt at economic adjustment would mean far more unemployment and a wave of bankruptcies and foreclosures not only of farms and businesses but even of cities and maybe States. We have a bear by the tail, and our safety lies only in killing the bear, not in turning him loose to destroy us. The bear, of course, is unemployment.

We shall solve our problem not by running away from it but by facing it more boldly and resolutely.

The question is, How shall we work at it so as to interfere to the least extent possible with the freedom of any of our people and at the same time to assure to all a decent opportunity and a reasonable security.

PROPER ECONOMIC FUNCTIONS OF DEMOCRATIC GOVERNMENT

It is not the business of government in a democracy to produce goods. Only where private monopoly of absolutely essential public utilities and natural resources has compelled the assertion of a public interest would I make an exception to that statement. But to remove the obstacles to full production, to enable our people to consume what we can so easily produce, to see to it that the very medium of exchange upon which all production and consumption depend is not clogged in its free flow, these things it seems to me are indeed not only a proper but a necessary duty and obligation of government in a democratic nation today. And not only do I believe that by a proper discharge of these duties we can very largely meet our problem of unemployment, but my fears for the future of our freedom and democracy are largely founded on a concern lest we too long neglect the performance of these duties.

THE MONEY ILLUSION

Unless we bring about a situation where, in the public interest, the Congress of the United States can control the creation and the flow of the medium of exchange of this Nation, our industry and agriculture must continue, as I see it, to be largely controlled by finance. And the natural interest of the financial powers is in keeping money dear and all other things cheap. Under our present monetary system, we can never achieve a condition where our economy and our people will be protected against the sharp inflation and deflation of values, which has been so disastrous in the past. Indeed, most people do not stop to realize that the real worth of our food, our houses, our property, and wealth of every sort changes but slowly and over long periods of time. People gain the same nourishment from bread and the same shelter from a house, the same production from a farm, in depression as in prosperity. Yet the prices of these things may be many times as high in a boom as in a depression. This is because the buying power of the dollar has changed; and since all values are measured in dollars, we think the values of real wealth have changed.

POWER OF THE FINANCIAL SYSTEM

May I point out that the power to add to or to drastically subtract from the volume of our medium of exchange in the form of money and demand bank deposits lies almost wholly today in the hands of the private banking system, which, quite naturally, carries on its business for the sake of its own profit. Thus the power to control the dollar value of all real wealth lies in the hands of one small group of our people pursuing—quite naturally, as I say—their own private interest. I blame no individual. Certainly I do not blame the small banker. I do blame this system and think it is wrong and must, for the sake of the general welfare, be changed. If we would end unemployment, we must end this "money illusion," and, having reestablished prosperity, must thereafter maintain a constant, steady, and dependable relationship between the flow of goods and the flow of money; or, to put it another way around, we must maintain a stable buying power in our dollar.

OLD-AGE PENSION SYSTEM AS ATTACK ON UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Speaker, there are a number of approaches to this problem of unemployment that has been suggested, and our task is to devise an approach to that problem which is going to be consistent in every way with the traditions of America and with our constitutional democracy. In my judgment, although I do not know that it will completely solve the problem, its solution lies in having the Congress recognize that it is a primary duty to see to it that the consumption of the Nation keeps pace with its production and that the primary method it must use in accomplishing this is the establishment of a scientific relationship between the supply of the medium of exchange in active circulation and the productive capacity of the country.

Now, how shall this be done? By illustration, the way that perhaps I would personally prefer would be this: If we had a national system of pensions for our older citizens, we would have a mechanism which could unquestionably be used to establish and maintain this balance between production and consumption. We would have, in the first place, a dependable core of sustained purchasing power upon which all producers and industries in the Nation could constantly depend. We would have reduced the insecurity of every person in this country and thus dealt a blow at the serious problem of surplus savings which we face today. I would pay those pensions out of taxation, of course, as a basic proposition; but wherever a situation presented itself where there were idle men and idle productive capacity in the Nation and a stagnation of the flow of the medium of exchange or money, then I would add to that flow of purchasing power in this country not by increasing the public debt one single dollar, but by exercising the constitutional prerogative of government to put into circulation her national credit or money. I would pay this required additional volume of money into circulation in the form of pensions. It might even be wise to reduce the taxes otherwise relied upon to provide funds for the pensions, for such tax reduction would have the same effect as putting additional money into circulation—particularly if they were general taxes. Thus we would have created a machinery which, in my judgment, properly operated, might give us in large part the answer to our problem.

Approximately the same result would be obtained, of course, by promptly putting unemployed people to work doing necessary public works, for by the payment of wages for necessary public work we are again able to make up the deficiency of consumer buying power relative to production, which is our central problem.

I quote from the Philadelphia Record of the day after the President's message was delivered to Congress, where it said editorially as follows:

If the administration decided to end unemployment—to fight the depression as other nations are fighting their wars—

And that is what I have contended for—and announced boldly that its policy shall be "a job for every American," our unemployment rolls would begin to vanish as if by magic.

The experience in Sweden proved that. Long before half the unemployed had been put on public-works projects, purchasing power of the nation rose to the point where private employers hired the remainder to manufacture the consumer goods for which a demand had been created. Prosperity was bought, and the price was cheap.

BRIEF OF PROGRAM OF ACTION

As I see it, we have four things to do:

In the first place, Congress must perform its constitutional duty of issuing the money of the Nation. This is a function of sovereignty, and no people is free unless it keeps this power. It must be the agency which creates and puts into original circulation the money and national credit of the Nation. The bank of issue of the Nation, therefore, which today is the 12 Federal Reserve banks, must be a national, not a private, institution. This can readily be accomplished by simply purchasing the stock of these institutions.

Second, we must increase the volume of credit for competitive production and social investment and the volume of money in the hands of consumers of goods in sufficient amount to actually secure full production and full employment. Once this process is started in earnest, many of the funds now lying idle will inevitably begin to seek investment.

Third, establish and maintain a sufficiently effective and scientific tax program and pension and social-security system so that once full production has been brought about it can be maintained with a balanced Federal Budget and a dollar of stable buying power.

Fourth, as soon as unemployment appears put every unemployed person to work, creating needed social capital. We must do these things fearlessly. And our end and aim will not be to increase the power of government or to widen its field of economic activity. Rather, it will be to remove the obstacles now existing to full and steady production and employment in industry.

Why should there be opposition to this type of program? I am convinced there is only one main reason, and that that reason is fear of debt.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If I understood the gentleman correctly, one of his propositions was that through the means of social security, we will say, to have the Government issue—putting it in plain language—currency and reduce taxes for the same amount simultaneously with the disbursement of assistance funds. Would that not also call for a reduction in governmental expenditures by the amount of the tax reduced?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Oh, no; not exactly. I am talking about funds for paying the pension; and if it is important from the standpoint of the Nation as a whole to have a greater volume of money in circulation, then to have that medium brought into circulation by Congress instead of by the sale of bonds to banks for bank credit.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GORE). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD]?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. But with the necessary expenditures in the form of old-age assistance as they move out, unless there is an increase in the volume of business sufficient to bring in additional tax money with which to maintain Government expenditure on the going volume, it would be necessary to reduce expenditures by the amount of that reduction in taxes, would it not?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. But the reduction in taxes would only be with regard to moneys raised for this pension program, which would be replaced by money put into circulation for that purpose. The main principle I am trying to get at is very simple. It is that if a nation like the United States, in all its parts and with all its various economic groups, is in need of an increase in the volume of money in circulation, then it is the duty, responsibility, and right of the Congress to put that money into circulation, and it is not necessary to pay tribute to any private banking system when it does so.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Do I understand the gentleman assumes there is a fundamental difference between taxing and issuing currency?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I do. I know, of course, what the gentleman has in mind; namely, that inflation amounts to a tax on the community. But I am not talking about inflation. I would not put into circulation a single dollar if that could not be matched by increased production of real wealth. But if we have unemployment and idle productive capacity which we want to stimulate into activity, and if the putting into circulation of an additional volume of money will result in an increase in production rather than an increase in prices, then certainly we have nothing comparable to taxation. The system I am pleading for would render both inflation and deflation impossible. But today, under our present monetary system, the only way deflation can be prevented is by increasing the public debt, by selling bonds to banks for their privately created credit.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I would like to have the gentleman's opinion on a specific and immediate problem which has been presented to us by the Budget. That is the cut in W. P. A. appropriations which will mean that at least 900,000 men will be laid off the W. P. A. on July 1 of this year. This money will be used for the building of warships. What is the gentleman's position on that matter?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I think such a cut would be wrong. I think, if it is carried out, the consequences may well be the same consequences that took place in 1937. My own judgment of this matter is that, if we are going to take this approach to the unemployment problem, we must prosecute it with vigor. We will have to put into circulation a sufficient increase in the volume of purchasing power of the people to get the result which Sweden got, namely, to actually stimulate production to the point where a full national income will be realized. Then, indeed, the Budget could readily be balanced and without increasing tax rates, either.

THE FEAR OF DEBT—OBSTACLE TO PROSPERITY

Now, to return to the four-point program I referred to a moment ago. The one serious obstacle in the way of this program, upon which the hope of democracy depends, is fear of debt. That fear must be removed. If that fear were removed, we could beat the depression and win our war against poverty. And I am convinced not only the fear but the necessity of increasing public debt can be done away with by a simple, sensible application of the sound monetary principle, about which I have been speaking this afternoon. The Constitution says: "Congress shall coin money and regulate the value thereof." And the principle I would apply is that money should not be a commodity created and destroyed, bought and sold by private dealers in money for their own profit, but a medium of exchange to facilitate the transfer of goods from producers to consumers. Therefore the volume of money in active circulation must bear a steady and scientific relationship to the flow of goods and services, and it is a primary duty of Congress to see that this happens.

Therefore, insofar as an additional volume of money is required for sound economic reasons, it should be created by Congress, and no other agency, and it should be created debt-free at the point of origin.

The greatest economic power in the world is the power to create money. It is a proper power of only one agency and that is the sovereign Government of the Nation. But those who have profited from the exercise of this privilege and who in the past few years have bought billions of gilt-edged Government bonds with nothing at all except their privilege of writing figures in their books—these people naturally enough want to keep that privilege. I do not blame them nor hold ill-will against them. But I ask them today to answer just one question. What are we to do with the gold buried in the Kentucky hills? What good is it? Why have the American people bought and paid for it? Why were the people told for so many, many years that a currency backed by even a 5-percent gold reserve was a sound currency, and why are they told now that we must not issue a dollar of currency or base a dollar of public debt-free credit upon $17,000,000,000 of gold?

Can it be because, if we did so, then the mystery of money would disappear and no longer would the financial pundits be able to deceive the people into thinking that fiat credit created by banks is sound money while national credit or currency created by the people's Government is not?

On yesterday the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURDICK] spoke in the House and presented some of the facts and arguments contained in the remainder of this speech. I hope neither he nor other Members will mind if I cover some of the same ground that he did.

WHAT IS SOUND MONEY?

Sound money is money which is backed by real wealth. It is money which will over a long period of time buy just about the same amount of goods. It is a money of stable buying power. It is money paid into circulation by a sovereign nation, debt free at the point of origin, and which that nation will accept under all circumstances for any debt owed to it. It is money that is brought into circulation as needed; that is, as the people of the nation by their genius and their toil earn it into circulation by increasing their production. When we learn what sound money is, we will know how to handle the problem of getting ourselves out of a depression.

WHAT ABOUT THIS GOLD?

I do not believe for a single moment that either gold or any other type of backing is necessary to give the money of a great nation a stable value. Stable value will always depend upon the relationship between the volume of money in circulation and the velocity of its turn-over compared to the output of real goods and services. Nevertheless, there are still a good many people who feel that to back money with gold or silver makes it safer and sounder. We who believe in monetary reform can today meet those people on their own ground. We have at this moment $1,500,000,000 of idle silver seigniorage lying in the Treasury. We have $282,000,000 of completely idle gold in the same place. We have a stabilization fund of $1,800,000,000, which is probably three times as large as is necessary, and of which at least a billion dollars could be put to better use. This gold and silver has been bought and paid for by the American people. Why should it not be put to constructive monetary use?

In addition, by slight changes in present law, we could replace all outstanding gold certificates with United States currency, which is really all the gold certificates amount to anyway, since the gold which belongs by law to the United States cannot be used for this redemption. Then, on the basis of a 40-percent gold backing, we could have available a credit or monetary base of many billions of dollars with which to finance this war on unemployment. That is to say, if, instead of requiring 100-percent gold backing, as now required, behind gold certificates, we required only 40-percent gold backing, as is now required, behind Federal Reserve notes, there would be abundant funds to finance this war on poverty, to secure a sharp increase in our production, and thus to bring our Budget into balance at a high level of production. Indeed, by this method we would balance our Budget immediately by the simple process of making a constructive use of this gold for which the American people have actually paid so handsome a price. It is true that if measures of the kind I am suggesting were taken, it would be necessary also to provide against a further unhealthy accumulation of excess reserves in the banks and the possible result of a run-away inflation of bank credit. This, however, could readily be prevented by the institution of a reform long overdue; namely, the putting into effect of a dollar-for-dollar reserve requirement behind demand deposits, so that the money which people believe they have in the banks would be real money and not simply bankers' promises to pay.

These are the methods we should use to finance the war on poverty and unemployment. We should use them now. But we should not permit a single dollar of expansion of our monetary supply to take place unless it could be matched by a corresponding increase in production of goods and services. Once our people were back to work, our industry running at or near capacity and our agricultural prices restored to a fair level, then our policy of expansion should cease, except that we should regularly add to our money supply such amounts as may be necessary to maintain a stable buying power in our dollar on the basis of an expanding production. These principles are all contained in H. R. 4931.

How tragic a thing it is that men's energies must go to waste, their children must go uneducated, and that even democracy must be put in jeopardy all because we do not know how to write figures in books in the proper places and because we let the wrong people write them down. The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom, and I think we have reason to feel that fear so long as we permit this situation to continue. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, subject to the action of the Joint Committee on Printing, that in connection with the report of Tuskegee Institute which I will insert in the RECORD, I may include a small chart which accompanies this report in the article appearing in the New York Times.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday, the 18th of January, after the disposition of business on the Speaker's table, the reading of the Journal, and at the conclusion of any legislative business that may be in order for the day, I may be allowed to proceed for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOK]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HARRINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a short editorial from the Sioux City Tribune.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HARRINGTON]?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. SABATH, indefinitely, on account of illness in the family.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION REFERRED

A concurrent resolution of the Senate of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

S. Con. Res. 33. Concurrent resolution establishing a joint congressional committee to make a full and complete study and analysis of the Budget for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and the accompanying message of the President; to the Committee on Rules.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the House of the following titles, which were thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 884. An act to add certain lands to the Siuslaw National Forest in the State of Oregon;

H. R. 3051. An act for the relief of certain workers performing emergency work at Cairo, Ill., in the Ohio River flood of 1937;

H. R. 3087. An act for the relief of Gdynia America Line, Inc., of New York City, N. Y.;

H. R. 3363. An act for the relief of the American Insurance Co. of New Jersey;

H. R. 3912. An act for the relief of the heirs of John Cauley, deceased;

H. R. 4813. An act for the relief of the estates of Marie R. Morkovsky and Alphons Morkovsky, both deceased;

H. R. 5369. An act for the relief of Maj. Noe C. Killian;

H. R. 5919. An act to provide for the refunding of the bonds of municipal corporations and public-utility districts in the Territory of Alaska, to validate bonds which have heretofore been issued by a municipal corporation or any public-utility district in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes;

H. R. 6804. An act for the relief of George E. Miller;

H. R. 6832. An act to provide for the protection of witnesses appearing before any department, independent establishment, or other agency of the United States, or the Congress of the United States; and

H. R. 7327. An act for the relief of the Nevada Silica Sands, Inc.

BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on this day present to the President, for his approval, bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 884. An act to add certain lands to the Siuslaw National Forest in the State of Oregon;

H. R. 3051. An act for the relief of certain workers performing emergency work at Cairo, Ill., in the Ohio River flood of 1937;

H. R. 3087. An act for the relief of Gdynia America Line, Inc., of New York City, N. Y.;

H. R. 3363. An act for the relief of the American Insurance Co. of New Jersey;

H. R. 3912. An act for the relief of the heirs of John Cauley, deceased;

H. R. 4813. An act for the relief of the estates of Marie R. Morkovsky and Alphons Morkovsky, both deceased;

H. R. 5369. An act for the relief of Maj. Noe C. Killian;

H. R. 5919. An act to provide for the refunding of the bonds of municipal corporations and public-utility districts in the Territory of Alaska, to validate bonds which have heretofore been issued by a municipal corporation or any public-utility district in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes;

H. R. 6804. An act for the relief of George E. Miller;

H. R. 6832. An act to provide for the protection of witnesses appearing before any department, independent establishment, or other agency of the United States, or the Congress of the United States; and

H. R. 7327. An act for the relief of the Nevada Silica Sands, Inc.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. PACE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 23 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Thursday, January 11, 1940, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS

There will be a hearing Thursday, January 11, 1940, at 10 a. m., before the Committee on Naval Affairs, on H. R. 7665, to establish the composition of the United States Navy, to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels, and for other purposes.

COMMITTEE ON MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES

The Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries will hold hearings at 10 a. m. on the following dates on the matters named:

Tuesday, January 16, 1940:

H. R. 6130, to provide for mandatory or compulsory inspection and permissive or voluntary grading of fish, fishery products, fishery byproducts, shellfish, crustacea, seaweeds, and all other aquatic forms of animal and vegetable life, and the products and byproducts thereof, and for other purposes.

Tuesday, January 23, 1940:

H. R. 200, to amend section 4370 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 46, sec. 316).

Tuesday, January 30, 1940:

The following hearing was at first scheduled for Friday, January 5, but was later postponed until Thursday, January 25. Now it has been postponed again, this time being Tuesday, January 30, at 10 a. m.

H. R. 7357, to amend section 4472 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 46, sec. 465) to provide for the safe carriage of explosives or other dangerous or semidangerous articles or substances on board vessels; to make more effective the provisions of the International Convention for Safety of Life at Sea, 1929, relating to the carriage of dangerous goods; and for other purposes.

Tuesday, February 6, 1940:

H. R. 7527, to make effective the provisions of the Minimum Age (sea) Convention (revised), 1936, and for other purposes.

Tuesday, February 13, 1940:

H. R. 1780, to amend section 7 of the act of June 19, 1886, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., Supp. III, title 46, sec. 319), relative to penalties on certain undocumented vessels and cargoes engaging in the coastwise trade or the fisheries, and for other purposes.

H. R. 5837, to amend section 221 of the Shipping Act, barring certain aliens from participating in the benefits thereof.

H. R. 7694, to amend section 4311 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

COMMITTEE ON INVALID PENSIONS

The Committee on Invalid Pensions will hold public hearings in the committee room, 247, House Office Building, at 10 a. m., on the following dates on the matters named:

REGULAR ESTABLISHMENT VETERANS

Thursday, January 11, 1940:

H. R. 901. A bill to exempt resident inmates of the United States Soldiers' Home, Washington, D. C., and the Naval Home, Philadelphia, Pa., from pension reduction as prescribed by Veterans Regulation No. 6 series.

H. R. 4548. A bill to provide pensions at wartime rates for disability or death incurred in line of duty as a direct result of the conflict in the Far East.

S. 1643. An act to provide pensions at wartime rates for disability or death incurred in line of duty as a direct result of the conflict in the Far East.

CIVIL WAR

Monday, January 22 and Tuesday, January 23, 1940:
day, January 17, 1940:

H. R. 917. A bill to amend Public Law No. 190 of the Sixty-sixth Congress.

H. R. 1666. A bill granting pensions and increase of pensions to widows, former widows, and children of certain soldiers, sailors, and marines of the Civil War, and for other purposes.

H. R. 2208. A bill to amend Public Law No. 190 of the Sixty-sixth Congress.

H. R. 3386. A bill to amend Public Law No. 190 of the Sixty-sixth Congress.

H. R. 6716. A bill to recognize for the purpose of the pension laws the service in the Civil War of certain members of the Fifty-sixth Regiment Illinois Mechanic Fusileers.

H. R. 6909. A bill to amend Public Law No. 190 of the Sixty-sixth Congress.

H. R. 6927. A bill to amend Public Law No. 190 of the Sixty-sixth Congress.

H. R. 7728. A bill granting an increase of pension to widows of veterans of the Civil War.

SUBMARINE OR AIRCRAFT DISASTERS

Friday, January 19, 1940:

H. R. 6532. A bill to provide pensions at wartime rates for disability or death incurred in line of duty as a direct result of submarine or aircraft disasters.

INDIAN WARS

Monday, January 22, and Tuesday, January 23, 1940:

H. R. 1006. A bill to adjust the rate of pension to soldiers of the Indian wars who served 90 days or more in active service against hostile Indians, and for other purposes.

H. R. 3996. A bill to pension men who were engaged in or connected with the military service of the United States during the period of Indian wars and disturbances.

H. R. 4924. A bill to adjust the rate of pension to soldiers of the Indian wars who served 90 days or more in active service against hostile Indians, and for other purposes.

H. R. 4991. A bill to pension men who were enlisted in the military service of the United States during the period of Indian wars and disturbances, and the widows of such men, and for other purposes.

H. R. 4999. A bill to increase the rates of pension in the case of soldiers who served 90 days or more in the Indian wars during the period from 1817 to 1893, and to grant pensions to widows of soldiers who so served in such wars.

DEPENDENTS OF REGULAR ESTABLISHMENT VETERANS

Thursday, January 25 and Friday, January 26, 1940:

H. R. 7191. A bill to make more equitable provision for pensions for the dependents of deceased veterans of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and the Coast Guard.

H. R. 7522. A bill to equalize the pensions payable to the dependents of veterans of the Regular Establishment with those payable to dependents of veterans of the World War whose death is due to service.

H. R. 7652. A bill to grant pensions and increase of pensions to widows and dependents of certain deceased members or former members of the military or naval service.

H. R. 7734. A bill to equalize the pensions payable to the dependents of veterans of the Regular Establishment with those payable to the dependents of veterans of the World War whose death is due to service.

MEDAL OF HONOR PENSIONS

Thursday, February 1, 1940:

H. R. 3385. A bill to liberalize the provisions of the Medal of Honor Roll Act of April 27, 1916.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1243. A letter from the Attorney General of the United States, transmitting draft of a proposed bill to amend the Criminal Code so as to confer concurrent jurisdiction on courts of the United States over crimes committed on certain Federal reservations; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1244. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting draft of a proposed bill to amend an act entitled "An act providing for the transfer of the duties authorized and authority conferred by law upon the board of road commissioners in the Territory of Alaska to the Department of the Interior, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1932 (47 Stat. 446); to the Committee on the Territories.

1245. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated December 19, 1939, submitting a report, together with accompanying papers and an illustration, on reexamination of Mississippi River between Missouri River and Minneapolis, Minn., with a view to determining if the existing project for the section at and near St. Paul, Minn., should be modified in any way at the present time, requested by resolution of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, House of Representatives, adopted February 8, 1938 (H. Doc. No. 547); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with an illustration.

1246. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Treasury Department for the fiscal year 1940, amounting to $29,300,000 (H. Doc. No. 548); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

1247. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting the supplemental estimates of appropriations for the legislative establishment, Library of Congress, for the fiscal year 1941, in the amount of $1,072,421 (H. Doc. No. 549); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

1248. A letter from the president, Georgetown Barge, Dock, Elevator & Railway Co., transmitting annual report of the Georgetown Barge, Dock, Elevator & Railway Co. for the year ended December 31, 1939; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

1249. A letter from the director, national legislative committee, the American Legion, transmitting the proceedings of the Twenty-first Annual National Convention of the American Legion, held at Chicago, Ill., September 25-28, 1939 (H. Doc. No. 550); to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

SENATE

THURSDAY, JANUARY 11, 1940

The Chaplain, Rev. Z. Barney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Dear Lord, who without stint doest give Thyself to us so that, seeking Thee, we find Thee everywhere, and even when we fail to seek we find ourselves in Thee: Harken to us as we pray, for thought and prayer o'erleap all boundaries of space and time, climbing the highest courts of heaven, where perfect peace finds perfect form in Him who wore our human flesh and toiled and suffered as a man, making Thy love available to all.

Help us, therefore, by Thy mercies, O God, to present our bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto Thee, which is our reasonable service; and grant that we be not conformed to this world but transformed by the renewing of our minds, that we may prove what is that good and acceptable and perfect will of Thine.

Make us to abhor that which is evil and to cling to that which is good, being kindly affectioned one to another with brotherly love, in honor preferring one another, that the people whom we serve may likewise yield themselves to the sovereignty of love. Through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

ATTENDANCE OF A SENATOR

JOHN H. OVERTON, a Senator from the State of Louisiana, appeared in his seat today.

OLD-AGE-ASSISTANCE PAYMENTS TO OHIO

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business is concluded.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, I desire to call attention to a bill which was on the calendar of the Senate until October 31, 1939. I refer to Calendar No. 1186, House bill 5118, for the relief of the State of Ohio.

On October 31, 1939, the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] raised a point in reference to the bill which was then on the calendar, for the relief of the State of Ohio, and suggested that he thought the Committee on the Judiciary, which had reported the bill, should look into the matter further. At that time I made a statement, and then made the motion that the bill be recommitted. That was done. Since that time the Senator from New Mexico and myself and the proponents of the measure in the other House, the bill having passed the House by unanimous consent, have gone into the matter thoroughly and reached a full agreement in reference to it; and, with the consent and approval of the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, as well as of the senior Senator from New Mexico, I now move that the Committee on the Judiciary be discharged from the further consideration of the bill to which I have referred.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I should like to inquire what is the purport of the bill. I did not quite understand.

Mr. BURKE. It is a bill for the relief of the State of Ohio. The Social Security Administration withheld payment of the November 1938 payment, and the matter has now been fully corrected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the motion of the Senator from Nebraska is agreed to.

Mr. BURKE. I now move the immediate consideration of the bill to which I have referred, House bill 5118, and when the bill is taken up by the Senate, I desire to offer an amendment to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5118) for the relief of the State of Ohio, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the State of Ohio the sum of $1,338,160.92, being the amount of payments with respect to old-age assistance under title I of the Social Security Act for the month of October 1938, not paid to such State on account of the refusal of the Social Security Board to certify such amount for payment to such State.

Mr. BURKE. I now offer the amendment which I indicated I would offer.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert the following:

That notwithstanding the provisions of title I of the Social Security Act, the Social Security Board is authorized and directed to ascertain the total of the sums disbursed by the State of Ohio as old-age assistance (money payments) for the month of October 1938, with respect to each aged needy individual eligible under the State old-age assistance plan, who at the time of such disbursement was 65 years of age or older, and was not an inmate of a public institution, not counting so much of such expenditure with respect to any individual for such month as exceeded $30, and to certify an amount equal to one-half such total of such sums to the Secretary of the Treasury.

The Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, pay the amount so certified to the State of Ohio.

For purposes of estimates and other certifications with respect to the State of Ohio under title I of the Social Security Act, such amount so paid shall be considered as certification of exactly the correct amount payable with respect to such month, without any increase or reduction of amount with respect to any other periods except for recoveries from estates in or for such month.

Notwithstanding the provisions of title I of the Social Security Act, such amount so paid may be used for purposes other than old-age assistance.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BURKE. I yield.

Mr. KING. I inquire if the Senators from Ohio have been advised of the bill in its modified form?

Mr. BURKE. Yes; and they are in full accord with it. Representative JENKINS of Ohio, who is now in the Senate Chamber, is the Member who introduced the bill in the other House, and it was largely through his efforts, with the Senator from New Mexico, that the matter has been worked out and adjusted with the Social Security Administrator and the counsel for the Board, who drew the amendment which I have offered.
